Plane, 11 Aboard, Falls in 'Frisco Bay

Coast Guard Speeds Hunt For Victims In Harbor

Air Liner Due From Los Angeles Shortly Before Plunge.

List of 8 Passengers Is Given Out by Air Line perators.

San Francisco, Feb. 9 (AP).—A United Airlines plane bearing 11 persons here from Los Angeles fell into San Francisco Bay tonight, a short distance from its destination at Mills Field. The fate of eight passengers and the crew of three could not be learned immediately.

Four Coast Guard boats from here and Oakland sped to the area off the airport, 15 miles south of here. Searchers reported they were hampered by darkness, and needed searchlights aboard the boats.

The big twin-motored liner left Los Angeles at 6 p. m. and was due here at 9 p. m., but a few moments after the accident.

List of Passengers.

Airline headquarters here released the following list of passengers aboard the plane:

H. Lorge, Mark Fontana, J. F. Gilmore, R. Margaroni, R. Meyer, H. B. Freetlander, J. Grannon, and Miss Grannon.

Further identification or addresses were not immediately available.

The three crew members are Tommy Thompson, veteran pilot; Co-Pilot Joe De Cessaro, and Stewardess Ruth Kimmel.

Officials at Mills Field said the plane hit the water after an apparently vain attempt to reach the landing field.

Police Ordered Out.

Sixteen policemen from San Francisco were ordered to the field and ambulances were held in readiness. The weather was clear.

R. E. Neghirbon, an eyewitness, said the plane appeared to plunge directly into the water about a quarter of a mile offshore.

Neghirbon, an express company employe, was waiting for the ship to land to bring air express packages into San Francisco.

"She came in from the south," he said, "and then for some reason circled around east and started back south. The plane had no landing lights turned on.

"I saw her get lower and lower and says to another fellow 'she's going to hit.' There was a big 'wham' when she struck and disappeared.

"We got in boats and went out there, but couldn't find any sign of her."

The water where the plane struck is about 10 feet deep, residents of the area said.

Carolina Protests Stamps in Tribute To Gen. Sherman

Columbia, S. C., Feb. 9 (AP).—The South Carolina House of Representatives voted, 54 to 43, today to protest to Federal authorities against issuing postage stamps bearing the likeness of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman.

Gen. Sherman commanded the Northern army which captured Columbia near the end of the Civil War, and Confederate historians have charged him with responsibility for burning this city in February, 1865.

"This very building shows the marks of his attack on Columbia," said Representative John A. May, of Aiken, sponsor of the resolution of protest.

He referred to scars on the State House, said to have been caused by Federal shells.

"They say Sherman was a good man, but he was a little careless with fire," May went on. "He was nothing but a common pillager."

Criminal Justice Association Appoints Dr. Nolan Director

Chairmen of Committees Also Announced by President Meyer.

DR. JAMES ALLEN NOLAN.

Appointment of Dr. James Allen Nolan as director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association was announced last night at a dinner meeting of the association at the National Press Club by Eugene Meyer, president of the association.

James M. Hepbron, director of the Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission, who has been acting director of the Washington association for several months, will continue to serve as consultant.

Dr. Nolan is well known in the District of Columbia. He was graduated from St. Viator College, Kankakee, Ill., in 1929, with a Bachelor of Arts degree. He received his M. A. from Catholic University in 1932 and his Ph. D. in social science from the same institution in 1936.

From 1933 to 1936 he was employed by the Bureau of Rehabilitation of the District of Columbia. He was appointed assistant director of the bureau in June, 1934, and served in that capacity until last year, when he became secretary and consultant of corrections in the Department of Family and Child Welfare, Washington Council of Social Agencies.

Dr. Nolan is the author of three sociological works concerned with District of Columbia social problems: "One Hundred Prisoners," a study of the operation of parole in the District of Columbia; "The Lorton Reformatory," and "Parole in the District of Columbia."

He is a member of the American Sociological Society and of the American Association of Social Workers.

Mr. Meyer also announced the following chairmen of standing committees of the association: Courts and prosecutions, Frank Nesbit; police, John A. Remon; probation and parole, Mrs. Louis B. Castell; institutions, Marcy L. Sperry.

Dr. Leonarde Keeler, director of the scientific crime detection laboratory, Northwestern University, Chicago, was the principal speaker. Dr. Keeler is known through the United States as the inventor of the polygraph or "lie detector." Mrs. Keeler, an authority on questionable documents, briefly described her work in this field.

Pinkerton Man Tells of Trailing E. F. McGrady

Assistant Labor Secretary Shadowed in 1935 G. M. Strike.

By the United Press.

Testimony that a Pinkerton detective spied on Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady in 1935 when he sought to mediate a General Motors strike in Toledo, Ohio, was placed before the Senate Civil Liberties Committee yesterday.

The committee, headed by Senator Robert M. La Follette, also brought out that General Motors Corporation ended its relations with the famous detective agency only nine days ago. A strike in G. M. C. plants was called 42 days ago by Homer W. Martin, head of the United Automobile Workers of America.

Records offered in evidence previously showed the corporation paid the Pinkerton agency $167,000 for its services in 1935. G. M. C. officials have been summoned before the committee for questioning on charges by unionists that detectives were employed to coerce potential union members and to spy on their activities.

Tells of Shadowing.

McGrady, the New Deal's most prominent strike mediator, was drawn into the testimony by William H. Martin, youthful former Pinkerton detective. He said that in 1935 he was ordered by R. L. Burnside, assistant superintendent of the Pinkerton office in Detroit, to go to Toledo, where a strike was in progress at General Motors' Chevrolet plant, and follow "a man named McGrady, a Government mediator."

He added that there were 40 or 50 Pinkerton operatives in Toledo at the time of the strike. His efforts to shadow McGrady, Martin confessed, were futile. He rented a hotel room adjoining the one McGrady occupied. He said he put his ears to the wall when McGrady conferred in his room with union leaders.

"But I didn't hear anything," Martin admitted.

Burnside was summoned. He didn't recall having ordered Martin to shadow McGrady, but said, "If he says I told him to, I guess I did."

Under questioning Burnside said he would instruct operatives to

Fall of Malaga Laid by Madrid To Duce's Navy

Neutrality Pact Is Called 'Mockery;' Rebels Claim Valencia Road Cut.

By the Associated Press.

Valencia, Feb. 10 (Wednesday).—The Spanish Socialist government early today flatly charged the Italian navy with playing an important role in the fall of Malaga.

A note issued following upon a special cabinet session last night accused Italian warships of "maneuvering in such a way as to deceive loyalist vessels hurrying aid to the city, causing the latter to use up fuel and preventing them from reaching their objective."

The government termed the alleged intervention of Italian ships "the climax of a long series of direct acts supporting the rebels and making a mockery of the "international) nonintervention agreement."

Madrid Cut Off, Rebels Say.

By the Associated Press.

With Fascists, outside Madrid, Feb. 9.—Gen Francisco Franco's Fascist troops proclaimed tonight they had severed Madrid's last important highway communication line. The Valencia road, in a bloody conflict with Socialist forces today.

(Madrid dispatches said the government troops had withstood an insurgent attack on the road).

Storming government trenches around the highway about 10 miles southeast of Madrid, foreign Legionnaires and Moors, who repeatedly have been the main power in insurgent attacks, drove the government troops in retreat and killed at least 800, Fascist officers said.

The assault was the climax to a four-day push to break Madrid's strongest link with the present government headquarters at Valencia, on the Mediterranean coast.

Along that highway supplies had poured into the beleagured city, while civilian refugees had streamed out toward safer government territory.

A drizzling rain, which at times became snow, made little streams of water on the cold ground as the Fascist, spurred by their southern army's capture of Malaga, battled desperately for the important victory.

Government soldiers, as they fled, left hundreds of bodies of their fellows on the wet earth.

Neutral observers predicted the cutting of the Valencia highway and the capture of Malaga might mean Madrid would not hold out much longer.

Auto peace conferees authoritatively reported near "answer" to strike deadlock.

Gov. Frank Murphy called representatives of General Motors and United Automobile Workers of America to resume conferences last night.

President Roosevelt revealed that he had talked with William Knudson, G. M. executive, and John L. Lewis, strike chief, five or six days ago and had voiced the hope that since they were so close together he hoped they would bridge the gap.

New Offers Ready.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Feb. 9.—The twelfth session of the General Motors strike peace parley recessed tonight at midnight with no apparent solution to the prolonged deadlock. Gov. Frank Murphy said the conference would reconvene at 10 a. m. (Eastern standard time) tomorrow.

"Not a great deal separates them now," the Governor said in announcing that the same participants in the parley would be present at the thirteenth session.

Asked by reporters which side was making concessions, he replied:

"As I have said from the beginning, both sides are doing their best and reveal an earnestness in trying to settle the matter."

A more optimistic view by high administration officials in Washington, as well as disclosure that President Roosevelt had talked by telephone with the conferees who for six days have sought to break the strike deadlock, heightened hopes for an agreement that would return more than 100,000 General Motors workers to their jobs.

The new proposals were advanced, an authoritative source said, in an extended meeting of the negotiators last night, a meeting first scheduled to be of brief duration.

New Hope Appears.

This source, saying that "I think we see a ray of light" in the difficult strike situation, declined to discuss the nature of the proposals. He made no demands of either side but, maintaining neutrality in the dispute, had urged that an agreement be reached as soon as possible.

(Meanwhile the United Press reported that Homer Martin, international president of the U. A. W., still rejects suggestions that the union agree to set aside for further discussion its demands to be recognized by General Motors as sole bargaining agent of the workers.)

Talked to Leaders.

President Roosevelt, at his press conference yesterday afternoon, said that he had not been in touch recently with the opposing sides in the strike. Later he amended this by saying that five or six days ago he had talked with both John Lewis and William S. Knudsen, General Motors executive, by phone and had commented that they seemed so near together in their negotiations that he hoped they would

Only Four Judges in 34 Courts With Clogged Dockets Found More Than 70 Years of Age

House to Get Two Bills Today for Changes in U. S. Court.

Robinson Favors Retirement at 75

Court Developments.

The House will receive favorable reports today by its Judiciary Committee on bills providing for voluntary retirement of justices at full pay and facilitating Department of Justice intervention in constitutional cases in lower courts.

Senator Connally, Texas Democratic stalwart, added his name to the growing roster of those opposing President Roosevelt's plan, and Senator Robinson, Democratic floor leader, urged 75 as appropriate retirement age for justices.

The Federal Bar Association here called a meeting for February 15 to consider the President's plan.

The Texas Senate, Connecticut House and Maine Legislature disapproved the plan, while the Colorado House indorsed it.

House to Get Bill.

By Robert C. Albright.

Two noncontroversial features of the President's plan to overhaul the Federal judiciary last night were marshaled for presentation to the House today in what may prove the first effective sounding of floor sentiment on the more drastic White House proposals.

The two measures, one providing full pay voluntary retirement of justices at 70, and the other expediting Justice Department intervention in lower court constitutional litigation, were called out by Representative Hatton W. Sumners, of Texas, following a meeting of his Judiciary Committee.

The Judiciary Committee acted as gathering opposition to an increase of six judges on the Supreme Court bench broke Senate odds nearly even on its chances in that body, and a small group of House Democrats organized to work for its overthrow.

Opposed by Connally.

Earlier, another Southern Democratic voice swelled the Senate opposition—that of Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, generally viewed as an Administration regular. Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson himself spoke out in favor of increasing the Supreme Court retirement age from 70 to 75, saying he did not believe "the fixing of the retirement age at 70 years is an indispensable part of the President's plan."

Meantime, at a White House press conference, President Roosevelt, reported taking a personal hand in directing the legislation, said he had not consulted any one in regard to a particular deadline for passage of his bill.

Asked if he would outline his views on the court over the radio, in response to requests that he do so, Mr. Roosevelt said he was not considering it. To all other questions, he referred reporters to his message to Congress.

Some 38 Senators continued on the officially "noncommittal" list,

Universal Closed Shop Sought In Labor Act, Davis Declares

Constitutionality Attacked in Supreme Court Appeal on Press Association's Discharge of Guild Newswriter.

By Sidney Olson.

John W. Davis, counsel for the Associated Press, making the first argument before the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the National Labor Relations act, narrowed the issue yesterday to "the question of the power of the Government to make collective bargaining compulsory in industry."

"We challenge that point," shouted the famous snow-haired, pink-faced lawyer.

"This act proposes to make the closed-shop universal in industry.

"If the court can support this kind of intrusion into the rights of industry, it is clear that no workman in the United States can be discharged without a hearing before the National Labor Relations Board.

"This universality of the act must be necessarily fatal to it."

The case in point is the Associated Press, petitioner, versus the National Labor Relations Board, and is popularly known as "The Morris Watson case." Watson, a charter member and vice president of the New York Newspaper Guild, a newspapermen's union, and an employe of the Associated Press in New York for seven years, was discharged on October 18, 1935, the day after he had signed a letter to his employers, as chairman of the Associated Press Guild, suggesting the restoration of the 5-day week in the association's offices.

The Guild charged that Watson's discharge had come about through his membership and activities in the union.

The Associated Press contended that Watson had been discharged solely because he was doing unsatisfactory work.

The National Labor Relations Board held a hearing in the case,

Trotzky Offers To Surrender For Red Trial

Is Confident of Acquittal by Fair Court; Phone Fails, Speech Read.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 9.—A dramatic offer by Leon Trotzky to surrender to Soviet executioners if an imperial commission of inquiry should find him guilty "in the slightest degree" of the crimes imputed to him by Moscow courts was read at a mass meeting here tonight after wire trouble had prevented the exiled Russian from reading his address over a telephone hookup from Mexico City.

(George Noback, secretary of the American Committee for the Defense of Trotzky, told the meeting the telephone company had informed him that wires had been cut somewhere below the border, the United Press reported.)

After waiting patiently in the Hippodrome Theater almost an hour for the scheduled telephone connection to be established with Mexico City, a crowd which had gathered to hear his voice heard his speech delivered instead by Max Shachtman, Trotzky's American representative and editor.

Address Sent by Air.

Shachtman began reading the address, which Trotzky previously had air-mailed to New York, after a feverish attempt by the sponsors of the meeting to reach the former Bolshevist leader.

Officials of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said "line trouble" developed on the hookup somewhere south of the border before the time set for Trotzky's speech.

From Mexico came word that Trotzky was seeking a telephone somewhere in the capital after a last-minute discovery that the instrument he had planned to use in suburban Coyoacan was defective.

The two telephone companies in Mexico insisted that their wires to New York were in working condition.

Police Prevent Disorder.

More than 100 police mingled with the crowd, alert for signs of possible disorder. The defense committee, which arranged the meeting, had charged that a plot was under way to prevent the exile's voice from being heard.

Najjum Death Holds Two Men, Blonde Girl, 19

Fourth Is Seized as Material Witness; Trio Traced by Large Green Sedan.

Two men and a pretty blonde girl were held last night by police for action of the coroner in connection with the death of James Najjum, 54-year-old insurance collector.

Najjum died in Sibley Hospital Sunday after having been found unconscious on Chapel road, in Capitol Heights, Md., January 20.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said late last night that Najjum died as the result of a beating he had received. His statement followed a chemical analysis of the victim's brain.

Those held were Lawrence Norden Ricker, 24, of 1530 Rhode Island avenue nortnwest; Robert W. Meinzer, of 3107 Seventeenth street northeast, and Eunice Constance Gerardi, 19, of 514 Kennedy street northwest.

A fourth person, Morris Wolfe, 23, of 1251 I street northeast, was held as a material witness.

Ricker, Meinzer and the girl were arrested after Detective Lieut. George Darnall and Detective Sergts. Aubrey M. Tolson and Jeremiah Flaherty, assigned to investigate the case, had made inquiries in the neighborhood where Najjum was making his collections.

They worked without clews, Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, said tracing Najjum's movements until they found an elderly woman living in the 400 block of Maryland avenue southwest, who reported she had seen Najjum coming to her house, and had gone upstairs to get her money and her insurance book.

When she returned and was waiting to answer the door, Najjum did not come.

The detectives then canvassed this neighborhood until they found a person who had seen the collector getting into a large green sedan. So they searched for such a sedan, and spotting it, they waited.

They then caught Meinzer and Ricker in the automobile near Meinzer's home and arrested them. The Gerardi girl and Wolfe were taken into custody later.

Nujjam's death raised suspicion of police when he succumbed in Sibley Hospital from head injuries Sunday.

He was first taken to the hospital after he was found unconscious on the Maryland road. He was re-

Orders for Jailing All Wendel Family Charged at Trial

New York, Feb. 9 (U.P.).—A letter was introduced as evidence in the trial today of three men charged with kidnaping Paul H. Wendel purporting to show that Gov. Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey advised Detective Ellis H. Parker to "put the whole Wendel family in jail."

Chief Cole said, however, the Mattson case was "getting hot again" and that he hoped for developments in the "near future."

'Pestered' in Cradle Marriage, Bridegroom Hires a Manager

Principals in the current cradle-marriage in Tennessee now have a business manager.

Charlie Johns, 22-year-old husband of 9-year-old Eunice Winstead, has decided that if he is "goin' to be pestered by curious people," he might as well make some money out of it. So all photographers, theater managers, radio agents and reporters will make arrangements from now on with A. T. Drinnon, of Morristown, Tenn., who will handle such affairs for the mountaineer couple.

Robert J. Denton and Hugo Johnson, contact man and camera man, respectively, for Paramount Sound News in Washington, learned this first-hand yesterday when Drinnon made them a business offer by telephone. They could have newsreel rights, it seems, for $1,000. They turned it down.

The offer was the result of negotiations begun last week when Johnson and Alfred J. O'Eth, sound man for Paramount, spent four days in the mountains getting acquainted with the Johns and Winstead families with the hope of making a newsreel of the young farmer and his child bride.

"We ain't a-goin' to have no more pictures," was the husband's laconic reply to the cameraman's plea the first day. It was the last remark Johnson and O'Eth heard from him until four days later.

Meanwhile, the newsreel agents

President's Plan Based on Legal Delays, Aged Jurists.

New York City Jam Not Aided by Bill

Eldest of 12 on Bench in Metropolis Is Only 68 Years Old.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Copyright, 1937, by The Washington Post.

Justice Department records show that 34 Federal judicial district court dockets were in arrears on July 30 last, but in only 4 of the 34 were the judges more than 70 years old.

This was learned last night by The Washington Post after an extensive survey into the congestion of Federal court dockets and the ages of Federal judges.

The court dockets on June 30 were current and up to date in 51 out of 85 Federal district courts, according to Justice Department tabulation.

Although the court dockets in many districts were extremely congested on June 30, with ten district courts more than one year behind in their business, President Roosevelt would be able to name an additional judge in only four of the 34 districts under his court reform plan.

That plan would permit him to name an additional judge for each Federal incumbent judge six months more than 70 years of age, who has not retired after 10 years of service.

Two More for Ten Courts.

In the ten district courts where the congestion is held to be the greatest, the President under his plan—which he projected as a remedy for congestion of court dockets—could name only two additional judges.

Although the President in his recent message to Congress justified his plan for naming additional judges for those beyond 70 years by the congestion existing in the Federal courts, The Washington Post survey showed no apparent relationship beween aged judges and congested dockets. The heaviest congestion seemed to be in court districts comprising the largest centers of population and only exceptionally where the judge was beyond 70 years old.

Altogether the President could name only 12 district judges under his plan this year.

The other eight appointments (besides the four for the logging districts) would be made to districts where judges are beyond 70 years of age—but their dockets are held to be current by the Justice Department tabulation.

These figures are subject to but one qualification and that is the age of a judge in the Federal court for the Eastern District of New York, which could not be ascertained last night.

Distribution Shown.

The survey by The Washington Post into the ages of Federal judges, with the exception noted, showed the Federal judges beyond 70 years of age, against whom the President's reorganization of the judiciary is directed, to be distributed as follows:

	As of today	At the end of this year
Supreme Court	6	6
Circuit Court of Appeals	5	9
Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia	2	3
District Courts	12	16
U. S. Customs Court	1	1
Total	26	35

The President in his message to Congress reported 25 judges now beyond 70 years of age. He would not be able to name 35 judges this year, since his power to name an additional judge under his plan does not become operative until six months beyond the seventieth birthday of the judge and until the judge has served 10 years on the Federal bench. In the cases of two circuit judges who will reach 70 years during the next eight months, they will have completed but eight years on the Federal bench.

The Justice Department tabulation of Federal district courts in arrears on their dockets was divided into three parts:

(1) Those where there are delays of one year or more as the minimum period which elapses between joinder of issue and the time

Great Britain Aghast After Radio Comedian Names Mrs. Simpson in 'Sex Appeal' Program

By the United Press.

London, Feb. 9.—A radio comedian, John Rorke, was revealed late tonight as the person who shocked millions of British radio listeners by referring to Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson in connection with "sex appeal."

During a skit entitled "Masculine Fame on Parade," one of the singers reached the line, "We all have sex appeal" when someone broke in unexpectedly: "Yes, Mrs. Simpson."

Listeners were scandalized. Directors conferred. The British Broadcasting Co. apologized to the public and started an investigation. Mystery reigned until Rorke confessed he did it.

Rorke, agitated, told the press:

"The whole thing was a terrible mistake. It was not in the script. I wanted to say, in the Claude Dampier manner, 'Oh, Mrs. Gibson.' How the other name slipped out, I can hardly tell you."

Dampier is a well-known radio and film comedian.

"There's sure to be trouble," Rorke said sadly, "I can only say it was an unfortunate slip of the tongue."

John Young, author of the script, said:

"When I heard one of the artists mention her (Mrs. Simpson's) name I was shocked and astounded. It was a pure accident. I cannot say anything further, as the B. B. C. will not allow me to do so."

The startling interjection about Mrs. Simpson occurred just after the following lyric:

"We've come along this evening,
"And one and all we feel,
"We wish that you could see us,
"For we've all got sex appeal."

The BBC was inundated by telephone calls from all over the country protesting the incident.

Two Proposals For Courts Up In House Today

Measures Give First Floor Test of Sentiment on White House Plan.

another 30 had indorsed the plan, and 28 had plainly stated they would oppose any increase in Supreme Court membership. But informally, the opposition claimed 35 Senators had committed themselves privately to fight the plan, in a secret Senate poll.

Observers were puzzled by the maneuver to bring out the two judiciary bills, long pending in Congress, ahead of the President's sweeping plan. Some saw it as clever strategy to promote the retirement of two or more justices in advance of action on the White House proposal, thus tempering the Administration demand for an immediate increase in the high bench. Others thought it actually served the purpose of "splitting" the President's bill, inasmuch as Supreme Court remodeling was not included, though some other judicial reform features were embraced.

Suggestion that an effort might be made on the House floor to tighten the bills by incorporating other phases of the Administration plan were discounted by parliamentarians, who said such a move would be ruled out of order.

The Supreme Court retirement measure, giving members of the high bench the same privilege of retiring at full pay as is enjoyed by other Federal judges, had been favorably reported last week by the Judiciary Committee.

The second bill was approved only yesterday by the House Judiciary Committee, with only two dissenting votes. It provides that when a case arises in a district court, to which the Government is not a party, if constitutionality is involved, the Attorney General must be notified at once. The measure was amended in committee to permit the Attorney General to appeal an adverse decision directly to the Supreme Court. Private parties would not be granted the same right.

At yesterday's House Judiciary Committee meeting, the President's message was read, but there was only superficial discussion of it.

Chairman Sumners, in a brief speech, advised new members in so many words to hesitate to commit themselves either way on the President's plan, admonishing them that the committee was in substance a quasi-judicial group considering a most important matter, and should maintain an open mind. He indicated the Administration plan would be acted on by the committee in due course.

Confers With Bankhead.

Sumners' decision to call up the two non-controversial committee bills today was reached later in the afternoon, following a conference with Speaker Bankhead and Majority Lader Sam Rayburn.

Adverse reaction on the Supreme Court reform, manifest in the first bombardment of telegrams at the Capitol yesterday spread meanwhile to three State legislatures. The Texas Senate, Connecticut House and both houses in Maine opposed the plan. But the Colorado House supported it.

Shortly before the Texas Senate acted, Senator Connally, noncommittal to date, broke his silence.

"I am opposed to an increase in the Supreme Court to 15 judges in the method and under the circumstances proposed," Connally said.

"In the matter of the inferior courts, I am of the opinion that there can be no reform in the matter of expediting business and providing for Government representation in cases in which the Government is interested and favor action in that regard.

But Senator Morris Sheppard, Connally's Texas colleague, who previously had indorsed the President's plan, said he would continue to support it in its entirety.

Conflicting views were expressed in various quarters on whether the plan to add justices for every member of the bench over 70, involved a permanent increase in the Supreme Court to 15 members.

Senator Robinson took the position that an increase above nine would continue only so long as there are judges on the bench eligible for retirement. Justice Department officials gave a contrary interpretation. When President Roosevelt was asked for his interpretation, he again referred reporters to his message.

Fifteen Judges Possible.

"It is true that if the law were in force now and no justice of the court who is eligible under it for retirement should avail himself of his privilege, there could be 15 justices under the plan," said Robinson. "This number, however, is not a fixed number. Should all the justices eligible for retirement take advantage of the privilege the number would not be increased and would remain at 9."

The Senate's majority leader insisted the plan does not contemplate increasing court membership except as to new judges who may be appointed in cases where an eligible judge fails to retire.

"When judges retire the number is reduced by the number retiring," he said. "The purpose is always to keep nine members on the court who are under the retirement age."

Robinson supplemented this by a statement that he was "personally" inclined to extend the retirement age of justices to 75 years.

"Mark you," he said, "I am not giving any indication of the conclusions that will be reached. I am speaking solely for Joe Robinson. But I know of no reason for discrimination with respect to age as between justices of the district, the circuit and the Supreme Court. I do not know of any reason why, if the so-called inferior court judges should be encouraged to retire at a fixed age the same rule should not be applied to justices of the Supreme Court. I am looking for someone who can give me a reason."

Shortly after the House Judiciary Committee adjourned yesterday, Representative Emanuel Celler, of New York, a ranking Democrat on the committee and a close friend of Chairman Sumners, said he believed the voluntary retirement bill and the measure for automatic Justice Department intervention in cases involving constitutionality are the only features of the President's plan the committee will approve.

Celler recalled that the impression was given last year that two members of the Supreme bench would consider retiring, if the voluntary retirement bill, now slated for action tomorrow, were passed.

Fewer than a dozen members of the House attended the meeting of conservative Democrats called to oppose the President's plan to increase the court, but those present attributed the scant attendance to the fact that the House still was in session.

Representative Samuel B. Pettengill (Democrat), Indiana, who presided, announced Representative Eugene Cox (Democrat), Georgia, was named chairman, and authorized to name a steering committee to oppose the President's plan. The special committee will attempt to marshal State-by-State opposition.

Among those attending the conference were Representatives May and Chapman, Kentucky; Robertson, Smith and Drewry, of Virginia; Mansfield, Texas; Cox, Pettangill, Pearson, Tennessee, and Peterson, Georgia, (Democrats).

First authentic test of House sentiment may be provided today when Sumners attempts to call up the two measures favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee, under rules providing two hours debate, and no restrictions on amendments.

The first of these measures, permitting Supreme Court justices voluntarily to retire at full pay after ten years of service, also specifies:

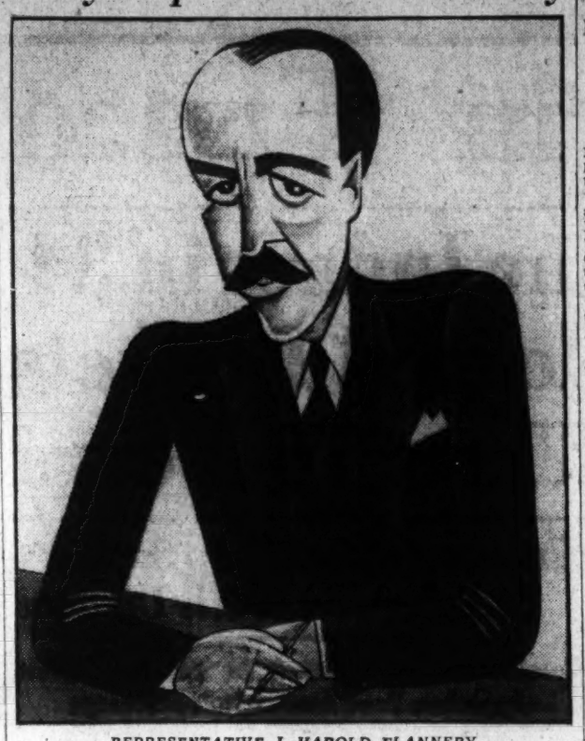
"The President shall be authorized to appoint a successor to any such justice of the Supreme Court so retiring from regular active service on the bench, but such justice of the Supreme Court so retired may nevertheless be called upon by the Chief Justice and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties, in any judicial circuit, including those of a circuit justice in such circuit, as such retired justice may be willing to undertake."

To make possible consideration today of the Judiciary Committee's second bill, broadening the Attorney General's power to defend acts of Congress through intervention in lower courts and direct appeals to the Supreme Court, the committee filed its report with the House before adjournment.

The report said the Attorney General would be "given the same rights as a (private) party to the extent necessary for a proper presentation of the facts relative to the constitutionality of the statute. The importance to the Nation of prompt determination by the court of last resort of disputed constitutionality of acts of Congress requires no comment."

New Faces in Congress

Political Blather Is Scorned By Representative Flannery



REPRESENTATIVE J. HAROLD FLANNERY.

Pennsylvania Congressman Worked in Foundry to Finance Education at Dickinson College of Law.

By Liam Lenihan.

Representative J. Harold Flannery, who bears a fleeting resemblance to Britian's Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, describes himself as "a dry lawyer" not interested in "expedient political blather."

The sauve, soldierly-looking Representative from Pittston, Penn., whose father, Maj. John T. Flannery, was a veteran of the Spanish-American War, said yesterday that a political career was second nature and politics "a family heritage."

"Pittston is a small community, intensely politically-minded. Moreover, father was a local political big-wig," he said by way of explanation.

Born April 19, 1898, at Pittston, Representative Flannery graduated from Wyoming Seminary at Kingston and then entered Dickinson School of Law.

"I worked in foundries to finance my education," he said. "It was not financial necessity that prompted me to do that, however, but a philosophy inherited from my father."

After a short interim as soldier in the United States Army during the World War, Flannery graduated from law school and was admitted to the bar in 1921.

Private practice, however, held no allure for the moustached young attorney. He became active in local matters and was appointed city solicitor in 1926. In the same year he became Democratic county chairman.

Appointed prosecuting attorney in 1932, Flannery served four years and then entered the Congressional lists. He was elected by a majority of 15,331, snowing under the Republican opposition that, for seven years, had been in the saddle.

Representative Flannery, who had the backing of labor and the Non-Partisan League, voiced his interest in legislation that would benefit the worker and the coal miner in particular.

"I would like to see legislation passed that would do for hard coal what the Guffey Act effected for the soft coal industry," he said.

The Pennsylvanian stated that he is "indifferent" to the gay life and the social whirl. "I have no time for it," he explained. "There is a world of detail here to be attended to."

Three of Five States Assail Court Reform

Legislatures in Maine, Texas and Connecticut Disapprove Plan.

Three State Legislatures struck yesterday at President Roosevelt's proposed court reforms measure, as two others moved to support it.

Two New England States, Maine and Connecticut, led the country's Legislatures in recording overwhelming opposition to the Presidential plan and on the heels of their vote came similar action from traditionally Democratic Texas.

Almost simultaneously, however, the Colorado House moved to align itself behind the Chief Executive, while from South Carolina came a more cautious proposal.

Democrats Off Guard.

Heavy Republican majorities in Maine's Senate and House, catching their Democratic colleagues off guard, pushed through a memorial to Congress to "protect" the Supreme Court and the Federal judiciary "from legislative and executive interference and control."

Connecticut's Republican - controlled House of Representatives, by a roll-call vote of 158 to 90, adopted a resolution which urged its Congressional representatives to oppose the President's "astounding proposal," and termed an independent judiciary "the sole protector of the people against illegal or unconstitutional acts."

The Texas Senate, also lifting up its voice in disapproval, called upon its representatives in Washington "to lend their influence and cast their votes against passage" of the proposed Presidential measure.

Colorado Backs Plan.

The Colorado House of Representatives urged its Congressional delegation to back the President's plan and sent its resolution to the Senate.

The South Carolina House of Represetnatives sent to a committee for "extended study" a proposal to place the body on record as favoring the judicial reforms.

Maine, with Vermont, the only Republican States in the national elections, charged in its memorial the President's move was a "covert attack" on the Federal Constitution.

Oklahoma Is Favorable.

Oklahoma City, Feb. 9 (AP).—A resolution urging Congress to enact laws along lines suggested by President Roosevelt under which the United States Supreme Court might be enlarged to 15 justices was introduced in the House today.

Wyoming Plans Opposition.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Feb. 9 (AP).—I. W. Dinsmore, Republican, announced today he would introduce in the Wyoming Senate tomorrow a memorial asking the State's Congressional delegation to oppose President Roosevelt's Supreme Court reorganization plan.

Newswriter Released After Contempt Jailing

Flint, Mich., Feb. 9 (AP).—After spending the night in the Genesee County jail for contempt of court, Johnston D. Kerkhoff, a reporter for a New York newspaper, was released today on order of Judge Paul V. Gadola of circuit court.

The citation for contempt was based on Kerkhoff's refusal to discuss a newspaper story in which he described a "brutal beating" allegedly given a strike sympathizer by a band of terrorists

Noted Physician Dies.

Chicago, Feb. 9 (AP).—Dr. Frank Smithies, 56, internationally known physician and authority on intestinal ailments, died today after a brief illness.

Scarlett Applies For Full Divorce From Jane Cooke

Winston-Salem, N. C., Feb. 9 (AP). George Stanton Scarlett 3d, filed suit today in Superior Court here for an absolute divorce from Jane Dewalden Cooke Scarlett, member of a prominent Washington family.

Scarlett asked the divorce on the grounds of two years' separation.

The couple was married January 25, 1935, following an elopement. Scarlett was employed in the Cooke home. They eloped with the aid of the bride's sister and stopped at Scarlett's home here en route south on their honeymoon. Mrs. Cooke, mother of the young bride, took out a warrant for young Scarlett, charging that he had stolen several thousand dollars' worth of jewels from her home.

Mrs. Scarlett accompanied her husband back to Washington to answer to the charges of grand larceny, and remained by him through the trial, in which he was acquitted. After the trial, however, Scarlett returned here alone and has lived here since.

Only Four Judges in 34 Courts Lagging In Dockets Affected by 70-Year Age Limit

Survey Shows Proposal Would Do Nothing for New York.

at which a civil suit can be tried;

(2) Cases where there are delays from six months to one year, and

(3) Cases where the delay is less than six months but is two months or more.

A current court docket is regarded as one in which all ready cases are tried at the term of court following joinder of issue or immediately after joinder of issue. The periods of time shown do not include any intervals absorbed in bringing a case to issue or as a result of continuances of trial—events which are controlled by the attorneys in the cases, as a rule, and not always by the court.

The Federal judicial districts in which civil cases are delayed one year or more after the issue is joined, with the approximate periods of delay, as tabulated by the Justice Department as of June 30 last, are as follows:

Eastern District of Michigan (Detroit), 2 years.

Southern District of New York (New York City), 20 months.

Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 18 months.

Middle District of Pennsylvania, 18 months.

Northern District of Illinois (Chicago), 18 months.

Western District of Washington, 15 months.

Northern District of Mississippi, several years in some cases, due to large volume of war risk insurance cases.

District of Columbia, 1 year.

Southern District of Ohio, 1 year.

Eastern District of Oklahoma, 1 year.

In only two of the above districts are there active judges beyond 70 years of age. Judge Oliver B. Dickinson in the Eastern district of Pennsylvania will be 80 years old on September 25, and Judge Edward E. Cushman in the Western district of Washington, will be 72 years old November 26 next.

There are three other Federal judges in the district court for Eastern Pennsylvania in addition to Judge Dickinson. They are Judges William H. Kirkpatrick, 51 years old; George A. Welsh, 59 years old; and Albert Branson Maris, 44 years old. There is a second judge in the Western district of Washington, Judge John C. Bowen, who is 49 years old.

Oldest Judges Is 68.

None of the judges in the Federal district court for eastern Michigan is 70 years or older, although Judge Arthur T. Tuttle on that bench was 68 years old on November 8, last. The other judges on that bench are Judges Arthur F. Lederle, 50 years old; Ernest A. O'Brien, 57 years old, and Edward J. Moinet, 64 years old.

Thus under the President's plan he could not name an additional judge to the eastern Michigan court—where the congestion of cases is held to be the most severe—until May, 1939, or more than two years hence.

There are now 12 judges in the Federal court for the Southern District of New York, where congestion is held to be second greatest. Not one is beyond 70 years of age. The eldest is Judge Francis G. Caffey, who was 68 years old on October 28, last. The President could not name an additional judge in his case before May 1, 1939—the tenth anniversary of his appointment to the Federal bench.

Five Under 70.

There are two judges in the Middle Pennsylvania District. One is 64 years old and the other 60 years old. In the Northern District for Illinois court there are five Federal judges, the eldest being Judge William H. Holly, who was 67 years old last September. The others are 67, 61, 56 and 48 years old.

The congestion in the Northern Mississippi district arises from a large volume of war risk insurance cases. A Justice Department memorandum states that "a deplorable, almost a hopeless situation exists in connection with war risk insurance cases in the two districts of Mississippi."

"Numerous cases of this group have been pending awaiting action for a number of years," the memorandum continued. "It has been estimated that it would take several years to dispose of the present accumulation. A somewhat similar situation exists in Tennessee."

On "Arrears List."

Despite the long delays in trying war risk insurances cases in both of the Mississippi courts, only that for the Northern District was placed on the "arrears" list by the Justice Department. The only Federal judge assigned to the North District of Mississippi court is Judge Allen Cox, who is 50 years old.

Despite the "deplorable" condition which the Justice Department holds exists in both Mississippi districts, the President permitted the Southern District of Mississippi judgeship to remain vacant from March 19 of last year until last month, when he made an appointment. The vacancy resulted from appointment of Judge Edwin R. Holmes, who served in both Southern and Northern Districts of Mississippi, to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. He was nominated for that post some weeks before the Senate confirmed him on March 19 last.

The District Court for the District of Columbia, which is one year behind in determining cases ready for trial, has nine judges. None have reached their seventieth birthdays, although Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat will reach that age on June 13, 1937, and Justice Jennings Bailey on June 6, next. Chief Justice Wheat will not have served ten years until 1939, and therefore is not eligible for retirement until that year.

In the Southern Ohio District Court there are two judges, one 62 years old and the other 45. In the Eastern District of Oklahoma, Judge R. L. Williams was 68 years old on December 20. Congress last June authorized the appointment of an additional Federal district judge for Oklahoma, but so far President Roosevelt has not made an appointment.

Delayed Districts.

Those Federal districts where delays in hearing cases after joinder of issue is between six months and one year, with the approximate periods of delay, in all or a part of the district, are as follows:

Northern District of Georgia: 8 to 12 months.

Eastern District of South Carolina: 6 to 12 months.

Northern District of Texas: 6 to 12 months.

Eastern District of New York: 9 months.

Southern District of California: 8 months.

North Dakota: 7 months.

Eastern District of North Carolina: 6 months.

Western District of Oklahoma: 6 months.

South Dakota: 6 months.

West Virginia: one to three terms of court.

Massachusetts: one to three terms of court.

None of the judges sitting in any of the above Federal district courts is beyond 70 years of age, unless it is Judge Marcus B. Campbell of the Eastern District of New York Court. His age is not given in "Who's Who in America," where The Washington Post obtained the ages of most of the Federal judges. A search of newspaper files in New York last night failed to disclose his age. Old New York Sun clippings of 1912 described him as a prominent Brooklyn lawyer 20 years ago. Efforts to reach Judge Campbell were unavailing. He was named to the Federal district bench on January 3, 1923.

Federal district courts where the delay in hearing cases ready for trial was six months or less, as of June 30, last, with the approximate period of delay, were as follows:

Southern District of Georgia: 3 to 6 months.

Western District of Tennessee: 3 to 6 months.

Southern District of Florida: 5 months.

Northern District of New York: 4 months.

Western District of Missouri: 2 to 4 months.

Western District of Arkansas: 2 to 4 months.

Northern District of California: 3 months.

Delaware: 3 months.

Northern District of Indiana: 3 months.

Western District of Michigan: 3 months.

Eastern District of Illinois: 2 months.

Utah: 2 months.

In only two of these districts are there Federal judges beyond 70 years of age. Judge William H. Barrett, of the Southern District of Georgia, was 70 years old on September 10. Under his plan, the President next month could name an additional judge for this district unless Judge Barrett in the meantime retired. Judge Tillman D. Johnson, of the Utah Federal District Court, was 79 years old last month. Despite his advanced age, his court was the last enumerated on the "arrears" list.

In addition to the four judges already mentioned, who have passed their seventieth birthdays, other active Federal judges beyond that age are Judge George C. Scott of the Northern District of Iowa, 72 years old; Judge John C. Pollock, of Kansas, 79 years old; Judge John A. Peters, of Maine, 72 years old; Judge Joseph W. Molyneaux, of Minnesota, 73 years old; Judge Thomas C. Munger, of Nebraska, 75 years old; Judge George F. Morris, of New Hampshire, 70 years old; Judge Henry H. Watkins, of the Western District of South Carolina, 70 years old, and Judge George W. McClintic, of the Southern District of West Virginia, 71 years old.

Judge Charles A. Boynton, of the Western District of Texas, will be 70 years old on November 26, next. Judge Ferdinand A. Gieger, of the Eastern District of Wisconsin, will reach that age on October 15, next. These two, along with the two District of Columbia judges who will reach 70 this year, make four in that category.

leased and then readmitted after complained of severe head pains.

Robbery is thought to be the motive for the crime after Nujjam's empty wallet was found near his body. The pocketbook should have contained about $18, members of his family said.

Meanwhile formal charges of murder were lodged against two white men and five colored persons yesterday after a coroner's jury investigated the death of Henry Wills, colored, 48, of 406 First street southwest.

The jury held the seven responsible for the death of Wills, who succumbed in Providence Hospital Saturday from burns received when his house caught fire Friday night, while he was asleep on the second floor.

In additional to the murder charge, the five colored persons were each charged with robbery in connection with the theft of about $10 from one of the white men being held.

Suspects Denied Bond.

Those held at the District Jail last night and denied bond were Hampton J. Brown, 22, 900 D street southwest; Grady A. Miller, 38, 700 block F street southwest; Edna Harris, colored, 24, and John Harris, 27, both of the 400 block Delaware avenue southwest; Elizabeth Golchrist, colored, Canal street southwest; Della Price, colored, 30, of the First street address, and Lee A. Whitehead, colored, 24, 100 block L street southeast.

Robbery charges were placed against the colored suspects after they are alleged to have admitted to police taking the money from Miller while all were in Wills' home.

The coroner's jury held the group for grand jury action after Detective Sergt. Walter J. Beck, of the homicide squad, completed testimony based on his investigation.

He said he learned all of those held were in Wills' home when an argument started allegedly over the theft of Miller's money. During a fight which ensued, a kerosene lamp was overturned setting aflame the curtains and walls on the first floor, Beck's investigation disclosed.

When the fire broke out, all those in the fight are accused of having left the house without notifying Wills of the fire or arousing him from his bed. He was burned critically before firemen could rescue him.

U. S. Labor Act Challenged in Supreme Court

Davis Charges Universal Closed Shop Is Sought; Denies Control Power.

found the Associated Press had discriminated against Watson because of his union activities, and ordered him reinstated with full pay minus whatever sums he had earned subsequent to his discharge.

The press association appealed to the Second District Court, in New York, with the general contention that the labor relations act, known generally as the Wagner act, was unconstitutional.

Support Labor Board.

This court accepted the NLRB's findings of fact. With the question resting on the act's constitutionality, the case was taken to the Supreme Court.

The eventual decision of the court in the case is regarded as one of the major tests of the New Deal.

Morris Ernst, attorney for the Newspaper Guild, asked Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes yesterday for an additional 20 minutes, besides the two hours now allotted to the Government, for defense of the act, in which to plead.

Hughes smilingly refused to extend the allotted time, but suggested that perhaps Solicitor General Stanley Reed, in charge of the Government's case, would grant Ernst a part of the Government's time.

Reed immediately explained the Government's argument would consume the entire time allotted, but added that perhaps the court would see fit to grant Ernst his extra 20 minutes.

Full Bench Present.

Throughout the presentation by Davis, which extended for 1 hour and 20 minutes of his allotted 2 hours and a half, the nine black-gowned justices sat silently attentive. In contrast to their usual questioning attitude, they sat relaxed, but listening closely as the calm-voiced lawyer smoothly and clearly presented his case.

Davis told the court that freedom of the press was directly threatened by the act. He said:

"How can a newspaper publisher remain the master of his business if the Government dictates who is to stay on his editorial board?"

Fears for Press Freedom.

"The freedom of the press is one field in the Constitution which must escape the Congressional intrusion which the order here so clearly and directly invades," he continued.

"Suppose one of our dictatorial neighbors in Europe should say to newspapers that they must hire only members of the Nazi, Fascist or Communist parties? That's possible there.

"Here, it is a most dictatorial power today, for the Government to name the men to write the facts on which public knowledge is based.

"This is not just a special privilege for newspaper owners. As the court has said: 'If we fetter the press we fetter ourselves.' The Constitution forbids the invasion of this right."

Outlines Issue.

Davis took pains to point the issue for the court. He insisted the case "does not turn in any sense upon the justice or injustice of collective bargaining—its blessings or injuries.

"It does not turn on the question of whether the Associated Press is engaged in interstate commerce. Some of its activities may in some degree be called interstate.

"It does not turn on the reason or unreason of Watson's discharge. He was an employe at will . . .

"The case does not turn on whether the Associated Press' reasons for discharging Watson were true or false, sound or unsound. That is entirely inconsequential.

"The question involves the power of the Federal Government to make collective bargaining compulsory in industry."

Discusses A. P. Functions.

In discussing the mechanics of operation of the Asociated Press he said:

"The Associated Press is as integral a part of the news-gathering agencies of the country as The Washington Post and the New York Times are among the newspapers of the country."

He advised the court to read with particular care Watson's own statement in regard to his dismissal. "Look at the picture he drew there of himself and decide whether a prudent employer would not discharge such a man . . . His discharge by Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, was done with a note which read in part, 'but solely on the grounds of inability.' The words, 'but' and 'solely' are underlined . . ."

He added that the Labor Relations Act was "obnoxious" to the Constitution for violations of the first, fifth and tenth amendments. He argued the Associated Press is not engaged in interstate commerce; that "there shines through the Labor Relations Act the fair and studied intent of Congress to bring industries together under Government control," and that the NLRB is given "uncontrolled discrimination" to apply the unit rule in industry, resulting in "injustice" to the minority of workers.

He scourged the arguments for Watson as reminiscent in logic of the nursery rhyme, "This Is the House That Jack Built," with their insistence on "because of this, therefore that."

At the conclusion of Davis' first argument, Charles E. Wyzanski, special assistant to the Attorney General, took the remaining ten minutes to begin arguments for the Government, which will be continued today by Wyzanski and Charles Fahy, general counsel, NLRB.

The first portion of the court's day yesterday was consumed by argument on validity of another New Deal law, the railway labor act, which guarantees collective bargaining to rail employes, excluded from the Wagner act's application.

H. T. Hall, counsel for the Virginian Railway Co., contended the act violated the due process clause of the Constitution, attempted to curtail liberty of contracts, and forced the railway to bargain solely with the majority employes groups. He denied coercion charges.

Marriage Clerks Are Startled As Cupid Sees Double Twice

In a double romance, twin brothers yesterday took out licenses to marry twin sisters.

Officials in the Marriage License Bureau of the District Courthouse thought little of it yesterday when swarthy, curly-haired Phillip Bellante, 27, of 824 Eighth street northwest, applied for a license to wed Miss Fanny Bridget, 18, of 638 Newton street northwest. Phillip had a dapper mustache and a pleasing manner, and the clerks smiled.

But a few minutes later another dark, curly-haired man, with an equally dapper mustache, stood before the clerks and asked for a license to marry a Miss Bridget—this time Frances Bridget, of the same address.

Then, realizing they were not seeing double, even if romance was, the officials learned that Phillip Bellante, and his twin, Neno, often called Tony, were going to marry the Bridget twins, who are blonde, and look as alike as the prospective bridegrooms or the traditional two peas.

Long ago the Bellantes vowed they would never marry singly—that when one married the other would, or there would be no wedding bells. Nine months ago Neno met Frances Bridget, and Cupid with his darts got to work.

Five months later he brought Philip around and introduced him to Fanny.

It was love's trite but true old story—at first sight.

"It really wasn't a blind date," Fanny chortled yesterday, recalling her romance, "because I knew exactly how Phillip would look by looking at Neno, and Phillip knew I looked like my sister."

At first the Bellantes, who are tap dancers and have been featured at numerous night clubs, and the Bridgets wanted to get married Christmas.

Then Frances changed her mind.

Yesterday consent was general. They probably will be married in a double ceremony today. And if they marry, they will live in the same apartment.

The boys are in great demand for walkathon dances.

"With a team of four twins we can make a lot of money," said Phillip.

"I know a chap who retired and bought a liquor store after three walkathons. The girls don't know how to tap dance yet, but you know how being around some one who tap dances is——"

I. C. C. Opposed To Repealing Rail Rate Rule

'Long-and-Short Haul' Law Essential, Committee of House Hears.

By the Associated Press.

The Interstate Commerce Commission went on record yesterday as opposed to repeal of the "long-and-short-haul" clause of the interstate commerce act regulating railroad rates.

Joseph B. Eastman, member of the commission and chairman of its legislative committee, told the House Interstate Commerce Committee at a hearing on the Pettengill repeal bill he had been authorized to express the regulatory body's disapproval.

Eastman, in reciting a history of transportation legislation, said railroads, through practics of favoritism and discrimination, had brought about enactment of the clause. It forbids the charging of higher rates on short hauls than on longer ones on the same route in the same direction.

"Until the time of the depression, the agitation was for more stringent rail regulation," said Eastman. "The complaint was heard that the commission was not strict enough with the railroads.

"But since the depression, the agitation has been the other way," he added.

He said that before enactment of the clause in 1920, intermediate points on transcontinental lines were discriminated against in the matter of rates. Much of that discrimination has been eliminated, he asserted.

9 Prussian Guards Salute Ex-Kaiser In Doorn Retreat

Doorn, Holland, Feb. 9 (U.P.).—Nine men in Prussian gray, their breasts heavy with the Iron Crosses and decorations of a fallen empire, clicked their heels and saluted a weary old man in the lofty hall of Doorn Castle today.

The old man, in a general's uniform hanging loosely on his gaunt figure, returned the salute through a rush of memories of days when he was Wilhelm II, Emperor of Germany.

The nine men in Prussian gray were veterans of the old Potsdam Footguards, come to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of the day when Wilhelm, a youth of 18 in dark blue uniform with white lapels, joined the footguards as a lieutenant.

After the salute in the ages-old castle hall there was a dinner, a few brief speeches recalling the old days and champagne toasts to the health of Wilhelm and his white-haired wife, Hermine, who donned gala dress and pearls for the occasion.

Jury Selection Nearing End in Korean's Case

White Plains, N. Y., Feb. 9 (A.P.).—Only two jurors remained tonight to be selected for the trial of Chang Soo Lee, Korean butler accused of attempting to poison two relatives of his wealthy employer, Mrs. Ida L. Churchill.

Prosecution attorneys said the two alleged victims, George and Louise Reeves, nephew and niece of Mrs. Churchill, would head the list of 43 witnesses expected to be called.

Heavy Snowfall in Northwest Expected to Aid Drought Area

White Blanket Will Supply Moisture Needed for Crops Until Spring Rains, Weather, Farm Officials Say.

Heavy snow yesterday blanketed drought districts of the Northwest and brought a promise of better moisture conditions for the coming summer.

Farmers in the area, said Dr. J. B. Kincer, chief of the division of climate and crop weather of the Weather Bureau, have good reason to look cheerfully on the heavy burden of snow because it will aid in making up much of the deficit in needed soil moisture.

In this opinion he concurred with weather and agricultural officials in the Middle West, notably St. Paul and parts of the Dakotas.

In North Dakota, where more than twice as much snow fell this winter than last year, officials were encouraged particularly. The Weather Bureau at Bismorck reported precipitation to date this year totaled 1.08 inches, compared with .42 inches in the same period last year.

Agriculture Commissioner John Hagen, the Associated Press reported, said the snow would be "particularly beneficial" to grass and hay next spring.

"Snow that falls in the State from now until spring," he asserted, "will increase sub-soil moisture, giving life to the crop until the supplemental spring rains come."

A. D. McKinnon, director of the Soil Conservation Service, which has aided in construction of more than 1,000 small dams in various parts of the State, also was hopeful.

His belief was that every reservoir thus created would be filled by spring.

Reservoirs were "materially aiding in raising levels in surface wells," he continued.

"Many of these very spots suffered during last year's drought," he asserted.

Precipitation in South Dakota this year totaled 1.97 inches, compared with the normal of .76.

Paul H. Kirk, Federal State crop statistician for Minnesota, said yesterday that the west central Minnesota areas that were bare last year, were heavily blanketed.

He explained this might prevent soil blowing in the spring. He added some snow fell before the frost came, insuring retention of moisture in the ground when the snow melts in the spring.

had circulated around the community getting acquainted with the Rev. Walter J. Lamb, the 53-year-old preacher who performed the wedding ceremony in the middle of a mountain road for a $1 fee, and with neighbors and members of the Winstead family.

Revealing some of his impressions gleaned on his recent trip, Johnson said yesterday that "the Winsteads and the Johns aren't regular hillbillies, as most people seem to think. The men are farmers, tobacco farmers chiefly. And by standards of their community, both families are considered fairly well to do."

He said further that Winstead owns two farms, of 60 and 40 acres each, has several head of stock, a number of hogs and chickens and an automobile. "Johns has a farm, too, and $2,000 in the bank," Johnson went on, "and from all I could find out he is, in the belief of Mrs. Winstead, as good a husband as Eunice could find."

Johnson said further that Charlie's uncle, Lee Johns, a prosperous businessman in Rogersville, stressed that "Eunice is a very bright, very beautiful little girl; Charlie will take good care of her. Charlie is a good boy."

Alaskan Colonist Plans Capital Trip To Protest Costs

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, Feb. 9.—Charles Ruddell, Federal farm colonist of the Matanuska Valley, Alaska, arrived here today and said he was going to Washington, to complain to Federal officials about financial problems of Uncle Sam's "pilgrims."

Ruddell said he came south from Anchorage in the steamship Gen. W. C. Gorgas, as "Emil Mintz," because a United States deputy marshal tried to prevent him boarding the ship. The Government recently started action to dispossess him.

The colonist said he had 125 affidavits from other colonists and carried "evidence" in his suitcase, including four horseshoes he said cost him $1.29.

He said after occupying a five-acre farm 18 months with his wife and seven children, he owed the Alaska Rural Rehabilitation Corporation $12,300.

Ruddell said he expected to draw his war bonus here about the end of the week and depart for Washington, D. C.

Senator Challenges Big French Deficit

Paris, Feb. 9 (A.P.).—Vincent Auriol, finance minister, was challenged in the Senate today to show how the government would meet a possible deficit of 40,000,000,000 francs ($1,840,000,000) for 1937 but declined to make a direct reply.

Also questioned as to the possibility of further devaluation of the franc, the finance minster of Premier Leon Blum's Socialist government, made a general assertion of loyalty to the tripartite currency agreement of France, the United States and Great Britain.

Abel Gardey, chairman of the Senate finance committee, questioned Auriol during a debate in which Gardey insisted on a halt to government spending.

Gardey asserted that the Blum cabinet "in a little more than a month this year has already equaled last year's entire deficit of 7,000,000,000 francs ($322,000,000)."

Envoy Again Lifts Hand In Nazi Salute to King

London, Feb. 9 (A.P.).—German Ambassador Joachim von Ribbentrop raised his hand in the Nazi salute to King George VII again today—at the new monarch's first levee.

Ignoring the furore last week over his first such salute, he stretched his arm straight out when he presented 18 members of his staff in the beautiful throne room of St. James' Palace, but his subordinates did not follow his example.

43,000 in Flint Idle as Troops Watch Strikers

Mayor Given Extensive Power; Silent on Plans to Avoid Disorder.

By the Associated Press.

Flint, Mich., Feb. 9.—This "capital city" of the General Motors strikes, where unemployment is greater than at the depth of the depression, passed an uneventful day today under the virtual dictatorship granted to Mayor Harold E. Bradshaw by the city commission.

National Guard officers, watching warily for any hint of impending violence, said that tension was no greater than it was last week.

Col. Joseph H. Lewis, commander of the Flint area, conferred in Detroit with Adjutant General John S. Bersey and Col. Samuel Pepper, Judge Advocate, with them was Assistant Attorney General Edward G. Kemp, but the conferees said there was no significance in their meeting.

Rumors of Patrols.

This city seethed with rumors. One was that military patrols might be stationed at the principal city entrances to divert some unnecessary traffic. Guard officer said that "all rumors may be discounted."

Mayor Bradshaw, whose part-time city position does not interfere with his employment in the sales distribution department of the Buick Motor Co., maintained complete silence on plans he might have for exercise of the extraordinary authority granted him last night by the city commission.

He said his connection with Buick, a General Motors unit, would not sway him in the exercise of those powers, and that he would be "fair to both sides."

Plants Virtually Idle.

The paralyzing effect of strikes in three General Motors plants here, which have virtually suspended operations in other of the corporation's units, was reduced to figures today.

Miss Ella Lee Cowgill, emergency relief administration field representative, said "our best estimates tell us of 43,000 persons out of work, which is 12,000 more than at the peak of the depression."

"Stay-in" strikers completed their forty-second day in Fisher Plants Nos. 1 and 2 today. Since 3 p. m. last Wednesday, they have been in violation of an injunction issued by Circuit Judge Paul W. Cadola. Since Friday, Sheriff Thomas W. Wolcott has held a court writ ordering their arrest. He continued to mark time today pending a reply from Gov. Frank Murphy to his request for the use of troops.

Picket Writ Sought.

Cleveland, Feb. 9 (AP).—While court hearings proceeded on General Motors Corporation's petition for an injunction, Mayor Harold H. Burton said tonight he would supervise an election among 7,000 employes of the strike-closed Fisher Body Co. here if both sides are willing.

Mayor Burton instructed Service Director Miles E. Evans to negotiate with Louis F. Spisak, local president of the United Automobile Workers, and Lincoln R. Scafe, general manager for the company.

Common Pleas Judge Joy Seth Hurd held today that the most important issue in the injunction suit is whether violence was used to interfere with operations of the company.

George Rowlette, trim shop foreman at the Fisher plant, one of a parade of witnesses, testified today that he was engaged in a fight with union pickets near the factory on January 28.

General Motors asks an injunction against union leaders and members to limit picketing, contending that the threat of violence prevents operation of its huge subsidiary Fisher Body plant.

Court Upholds Writ.

Kansas City, Feb. 9 (AP).—Judge Kimbrough Stone, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, refused today to vacate an order enjoining the National Labor Relations Board from investigating alleged unfair labor practices at the General Motors Corporation units in St. Louis.

An advance announcement of the ruling was wired last night to the labor board at Washington.

The order, which affects the Fisher Body and Chevrolet assembly plants at St. Louis, was issued in Federal district court at St. Louis last July.

Judge Stone's order binds the Federal board to take no part in the dispute between the company and its 3,900 workers at St. Louis.

"Sealed-In" Strikers Fight.

Detroit, Feb. 9 (AP).—The "sealed-in" strikers at the Kelvinator plant of the Nash-Kelvinator Corporation continued to hold possession tonight with their grip apparently stronger than at any time since a dispute with the management developed a week ago.

Although observers could not verify the claim, spokesmen for the Mechanics Educational Society, which called the strike, said the men had welded iron bars across three entrances to the plant.

The employment office entrance at the main gate remained open but was picketed. The administration building was locked and strikers successfully shut out executives and office workers who had been occupying it heretofore.

The "seal-in" is the latest development in the Michigan strike technique which has included in the last few weeks the stay-in, the sit-down and the trotting picket line.

Fighting broke out at the plant last night and the strikers ejected 35 men who had been sent into the plant by the management to act as "fire insurance inspectors."

shadow Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan, if he called at the White House in connection with the current G. M. C. strike, provided "we had that assignment."

"I can see no reason why Government officials should be exempted from such surveillance any more than anyone else," Burnside said.

Robert Pinkerton, 35-year-old chief of the far-flung Pinkerton organization, disagreed with his subordinate. He said he didn't remember the McGrady case but added:

"From the testimony I've heard, I would say the ethics were wrong."

McGrady was not disturbed by the disclosure.

"Of course, it is a terrible thing for detectives to spy on Government officials when they are on Government business," he said. "But we live in a goldfish bowl. Labor Department conciliators are under instructions never to do anything that isn't on the up and up.

"We always suspect that we are watched. We have been told our telephone wires have been tapped."

The dangers faced by a Pinkerton operative were pointed out by Lyle E. Letteer, son of the former head of Pinkerton's Atlanta office. He said he joined the Pinkerton force on May 1, 1934, and was assigned to undercover work in the Chevrolet plant in Atlanta.

Soon afterward, Letteer testified, he was made an official of the U. A. W. A. He made a complete report on happenings at union meetings until "one day the men realized there was a spy in their midst."

"I had attended a pretty hot union meeting and was seated at my desk writing my report when I heard a gun shot. A bullet landed about 14 inches above my head. I was sort of bothered by it. Then a couple of other times when I was driving on dark roads other cars tried to force me into the ditch. I was shot at another time."

Arabs of Palestine To Protest Report

Jerusalem, Feb. 9 (AP).—Palestine Arabs announced plans tonight to send their own delegation to London to contest findings of the British royal commission which investigated Jewish-Arab disorders here.

Arab leaders asserted they expected the commission to favor the Jews in its report on last year's general strike and resultant rioting in protest against Jewish immigration.

The Arab higher committee, which sponsored the six-month strike, announced a conference would be held soon to name the London delegation.

Arabs attacked Jews today near Samaria and 30 shots were exchanged, while a shot from a band of Arabs wounded a Jew near Hadera.

Marriage of 2 Women Voided by Texas Judge

Galveston, Tex., Feb. 9 (AP).—Judge Charles G. Dibrell has annulled the marriage of Lenora Ingersoll and B. S. Ingersoll on grounds that both were women.

Lenora Ingersoll, plaintiff, testified she and a sister met and became friendly with two men at a Mobile, Ala., night club and that a double wedding was held.

On the way back, she testified, her "husband" admitted "he" was a woman dressed as a man.

impassioned against his accusers, Trotzky reiterated in the air-mailed version of his speech that he was innocent of what he called "absurd" and "frightful" conspiracies attributed to him during the recent trial of Karl Radek, journalist, and 16 other Russians, 13 of whom were executed.

Asserting he could not have been implicated in "such an absurd, inconceivable, senseless alliance" as the alleged one with Japan and Germany for the dismemberment of the Soviet Union because it could yield to revolutionary Marxists nothing but "disgrace and ruin," Trotzky reiterated his demand for a "public and impartial commission of inquiry."

"If this commission decides that I am guilty in the slightest degree of the crimes which Stalin imputes to me," he said, "I pledge in advance to place myself voluntarily in the hands of the executioners of the G. P. U. (Soviet secret police).

"But if the commission establishes—do you hear me?—that the Moscow trials are a conscious and premeditated frame-up, constructed with the bones and nerves of human beings, I will not ask my accusers to place themselves voluntarily before a firing squad.

"No, the eternal disgrace in the memory of human generations will be sufficient for them."

Trotzky declared it the "duty of all true friends of the Soviet Union" to say firmly to the Soviet government that "it is necessary at all costs to dispel the distrust of the Western world for Soviet justice."

He said he could present "an enormous amount of testimony and documents" that would "demolish at their very foundations the confessions of a whole series of defendants" at the recent Moscow trials.

The executions, he declared, were based "exclusively on forced confessions."

"He said the "simple secret" of the confessions lay in the "spirit of the inquisition" with which he declared the whole political atmosphere of the Soviet Union was impregnated.

"Through the G. P. U.," he said, "Stalin can trap his victim in an abyss of black despair, humiliation, infamy, in such a manner that he takes upon himself the most monstrous crimes, with the prospect of imminent death or a feeble ray of hope for the future as the sole outcome."

New Talk Basis Revives Peace Hope in Strike

bridge the gap. He said he had communicated similarly with Gov. Murphy Friday night and had expressed the same thought to him. Earlier information from White House circles was that the President had talked with Knudsen and Lewis Sunday night and had made his position clear, though the nature of the position was not disclosed.)

Secretary Perkins was reported in frequent phone conversations in connection with the strike, and Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, received word of progress of negotiations from James F. Dewey, department conciliator.

Dewey, who has taken an active part in the conferences with both sides in the far-flung dispute since the strikes became widespread 40 days ago, was in contact with leaders of the United Automobile Workers of America and of General Motors today, pending resumption of peace conferences tonight.

Governor Murhpy, abandoning a plan to go to Lansing, the State capital, spent the day handling State affairs from his apartment here.

Increasing contacts with Washington were reported to have been made recently by the peace negotiators here. After last night's meeting the Governor said he believed the opposing sides were "closer together now than at any time."

The recent settlement of the Libby-Owens-Ford glass strike at Toledo, providing recognition of the glass workers federation for its membership only, was reported authoritatively to be a possible basis for an auto strike agreement.

In this event, one source close to the conferees stated, the union would insist on positive guarantees that General Motors would show no partiality to a bargaining agency other than the U. A. W. A. in future negotiations. He added the union was demanding an agreement of indefinite length, subject to termination by corporation or workers on 30 days' notice.

Any agreement reached, it was said, might provide for settlement of a national scale of questions of working hours, minimum wages and maximum speed of production lines, leaving for local negotiation scales of wages and minimum production speed.

At Flint, Mich., where sit-down strikers in two Fisher Body Co. plants are defying a Circuit Court order for their eviction, more than 3,000 National Guardsmen remained on duty to prevent violence. Sheriff Thomas Wolcott had delayed service of the order pending result of the Governor's peace conference here, and General Motors has withheld action against union members holding a third plant—the Chevrolet motor assembly No. 4.

2 Power Firms Agree to File Under SEC Act

Announcement Is First Break in Solid Opposition of Big Utilities.

The North American Co., and the American Water Works Co., both giant utility holding companies, yesterday announced their intention of registering with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

They thereby broke what had been a solid array of big utility holding companies against such submission. Other companies are now expected to follow them into the SEC fold.

Once registered under the utility act of 1935, the big holding companies will have to agree to reforms laid down by the SEC.

The North American Co., the larger of the two companies which agreed to register, has assets of $1,200,000,000. With its 100 subsidiaries it has an interest in utilities in 1,500 communities.

Long dominant in the local transit and electric field, it controls the old Washington Railway & Electric Co., which company in turn owns half the common stock of the Capital Transit Co., and all of the common stock of the Potomac Electric Power Co.

The American Water Works Co. has assets of $500,000,000.

Both it and the North American Co. had brought suit in this city to enjoin the SEC from enforcing the registration provisions of the utility holding act. These suits, it was announced, would be withdrawn.

The crumbling of the big utility holding company front against registration followed by ten days a statement by James M. Landis, chairman of the SEC, that the companies were "cutting their own throats" by refusing to register.

His vigorous statement followed the action of Federal Judge Julian W. Mack, of New York, in holding that the utility act was Constitutional.

Chairman Landis said that the holding companies had wasted "unguessed amounts of the stockholders' money" for "spurious legal advice" from high-priced lawyers. He mentioned John W. Davis, attorney for J. P. Morgan, as "typical" of these.

Announcement that the North American Co. and the American Water Works Co. had decided to register with the SEC came after the close of the stock market yesterday.

Chairman Landis made public a letter he sent to James F. Fogarty, president of North American, praising the action taken. Landis said:

"I am happy to learn that your management has decided to bring about registration of the North American Co.

"The pursuit of such a policy means not only increased emphasis upon respect for law and law observance—so important in these days of financial and economic readjustment—but prevents the possibility of irretrievable harm being done to those moral sanctions upon which one must ultimately rely for the appropriate effectuation of broad governmental policy.

"As you know, the commission has always believed that any company by registration wil gain for itself benefits without losing the opportunity to challenge in the courts any action of the commission that it believes to be violative of its constitutional rights.

"As a result of the pursuit of a policy of registration, administration can become operative and the developments of holding company regulation can meet the ultimate test of benefit to consumers and investors alike—a test that in my judgment is of more enduring validity than those that such regulation can be subjected to by the limited processes of litigation."

President Fogarty, in a letter to North American stockholders, said:

"The board of directors have concluded that the interest of the stockholders will now be best served by registration under the public utility company act."

President Asks Report on Navy Steel Supplies

Lack of Bidders Feared on New Ships; Walsh-Healey Act Is Blamed.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt asked the Navy and Labor departments yesterday for a report on the Navy's inability to obtain steel. Naval officers have blamed steel company opposition to the Walsh-Healey act for the lack of bids.

The Chief Executive announced at his press conference he had asked for reports on the situation when a questioner inquired if any action had been taken in connection with the law. The Walsh-Healey act requires holders of Government contracts to conform to stipulated minimum wage ad maximum hour provisions.

Earlier in the day it had become known that the Navy, acting with the Labor Department, had circularized principal producers asking if they were prepared to bid on several million pounds of metal needed to carry out the naval construction program.

Naval officers disclosed orders have ben placed on only 7,000,000 pounds of steel since the Walsh-Healey act became effective.

The Navy has asked bids for 25,000,000 pounds.

Although Navy Department spokesmen say the building program has not been embarassed thus far by lack of bids, officers say a serious steel shortage will develop by mid-March unless new supplies are forthcoming.

D. C. Churches To Mark Start Of Lent Today

Special Masses, Services Slated for Observance of Ash Wednesday.

The 40-day Lenten period of devotions and spiritual preparation for Easter begins in all Christian churches today, Ash Wednesday. Many churches in Washington will observe the beginning of Lent at special masses and services at which the ashes of palms will be distributed in traditional ceremonies.

In all Catholic services the ashes will be blessed at early morning masses to be followed by distribution. These churches will call their parishes to worship again tonight for the first of a series of Lenten devotions.

At St. Patrick's Catholic Church the Ash Wednesday masses are scheduled for 7 a. m., 7:30 a. m. and 12:10 p. m. Lenten devotions will be at 7:30 p. m. Other devotions will be conducted each Wednesday night during Lent, while Stations of the Cross are given on each Friday night.

Special Services.

Nearly all Episcopal and Lutheran churches have special ash services today, as have many of the churches of other Protestant denominations.

The beginning of Lent will be observed at Washington Cathedral today with celebration of Holy Communion at 7:30 a. m., Litany at 10 a. m.; morning prayer and penitential office at 11 a. m. and evening prayer at 4 p. m. with the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, bishop of Washington, delivering the address. Canon Raymond L. Wolven, of the Cathedral staff, will preach at the 11 a. m. service.

The first of a series of evening preaching services during Lent at St. Thomas' Episcopal Church will be held at 8 p. m. today when the Rev. Frank W. Creighton, S. T. D., of Garden City, Long Island, will deliver the address. Bishop Creighton, a native of Philadelphia, left a business career to enter the ministry. In recent years he has served as missionary bishop of Mexico, and Suffragan Bishop of Long Island. Last month he was elected Bishop Co-adjutor of Michigan, a high position which he has yet to accept. He is coming to Washington for today's service because of his close personal friendship with the Rev. Howard S. Wilkinson, D. D., new rector at St. Thomas.

Brief Services Mark Funeral Of Elihu Root

Famous Diplomat Laid to Rest on Hamilton College Campus.

By the Associated Press.

Clinton, N. Y., Feb. 9.—The body of Elihu Root, statesman and diplomat, was laid to rest in an evergreen shaded cemetery on the Hamilton College campus today.

Only friends of the family, college students and a few representatives of the world of government and diplomacy, where the aged lawyer gained fame, attended the simple Episcopal funeral services.

Bearers were all youthful undergraduates of Hamilton College and Sigma Phi fraternity brothers of the elder statesman.

Rain Beats Down.

A cold, drizzling rain beat down during the entire ceremony.

The Right Rev. E. H. Coley, bishop of the Central New York Episcopal Diocese conducted the services.

The services at both the college chapel and the cemetery, located not far from the rambling house where Root was born, were brief.

Chief among the few widely-known persons who attended the services was Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of State under President Hoover.

Hoover Not Present.

Hoover himself, who originally planned to attend, members of the family said, was not present.

Others included Gen. Frank R. McCoy, of Governors Island, representing the War Department in which Root served as Cabinet Secretary under President McKinley, Frederick P. Keppel, president of the Carnegie Foundation; J. C. Holmes, Under Secretary of State, representing Secretary of State Cordell Hull, and Daniel Burke, vice chairman of the college board of trustees, of which Root was chairman.

Farmers Threatening 'Sit-Down' Tax Strike

St. Paul, Feb. 9 (AP).—State Representative George Cutting said today farmers in Olmsted County threatened a "sit-down" strike against excessive spending for relief and governmental purposes.

"There seems to be a spontaneous uprising among the people on the farms in Olmsted County and other parts of southern Minnesota," he said, "to either demand that the Legislature stop this tremendous spending spree or they will go on strike—a 'sit-down' strike—and refuse to plant crops, milk cows or pay taxes."

Diet Is Important in Avoiding Sinus Operations, Doctor Says

Correction of Nervous Disorders and Glandular Disturbances Also Essential; Fish, Fats, Milk, Eggs, Sweets Banned.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 9.Nasal surgery and nasal sinus operations, in most cases, can be avoided by correction of the sympathetic nervous system, proper diet and a correction of the endocrines, says a report today in the Medical Record by Julius A. Haiman, M. D., of New York City.

The medical name of these "sinus" ailments is vaso-motor rhinitis. The troubles include involuntary tears, excessive sneezing, puffy eyes, difficult nasal breathing, swollen nasal passages and sometimes nasal growths called polyps.

These persons often are said to be "waerlogged." Dr. Haiman said they are subject to frequent chest colds, bronchial asthma, nausea and other gastro-intestinal manifestations.

All these troubles he traced to instability of the sympathic nervous system, endocrine deficiencies and food, resulting in "apparent sinus trouble."

"These individuals," he stated, "have many anxieties and if the physician in charge does not go into the cause of these anxieties, little result, if any, will be accomplished. Their spirits are low, they feel beyond help.

"Many have spent considerable time in Arizona only to discover that the climatic change did not give them expected relief.

"Foods play a specific role. Milk, eggs, shell foods, fish, fats and sweets conrtibute toward these distressing symptoms."

Dr. Haiman said the waterlogged condition is "often" associated with a waterlogged, swollen appendix, which is mistaken for acute appendicitis and removed.

In the treatment, nasal breathing passages, if obstructed, are cleared by Electro-coagulation. Anxieties are appeased. Endocrine gland troubles are adjusted. But the essential treatment is correction of the sympathetic nervous system and diet.

Earle Hopes to End Cuts in WPA Rolls

An Administration hope that no further cuts in WPA rolls will be needed was reported yesterday by Gov. George Earle of Pennsylvania, after conferences here on efforts of his State to obtain PWA money of which the State was deprived by a State court ruling in the previous administration.

Following a White House visit, the Governor, with Senator Guffey, also of Pennsylvania, said the President was sympathetic to his plan. The State, he explained, lost some $80,000,000 of PWA money because the State supreme court ruled against the State authority act, which would have permitted acceptance and use of the money. Recently, the court has reversed its ruling, the Governor said, and he is seeking PWA funds to compensate Pennsylvania.

He and Senator Guffey said that President Roosevelt had been invited to two celebrations in Pennsylvania, the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Constitution next year, and the Gettysburg battlefield celebration in 1938.

President Asks Regional Plans InConservation

Message Today to Give Project for 8 Areas to Fight Floods.

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt revealed yesterday a plan for division of the country into eight regions with a board or authority over each to plan comprehensively for development of conservation of the Nation's resources.

The President made the revelation at his press conference in announcing he will send to Congress today a special message accompanying the report of the Great Plains Drought Committee which he sent through the drought-devastated Plains States last summer to survey needs of that section.

The regions would in a general way cover the entire country in such manner that none would have too large or too small a portion of the Nation's watersheds. Each year the officials in charge of the planning in each area would submit to the Administration, in order of preference, a list of projects considered necessary or advisable for the area.

In July or August, when all the recommendations were in, the President said, the Administration would add the sums needed for all the projects, compare the total with the amount available for such developments under the budget and determine what proportion of the recommended projects could be authorized.

Would Fit Budget.

Then the proposed national planning agency, in the President's Government reorganization proposal, would have the various regions scale down their recommendations to fit into the total budget available. Each region, also, would submit a secondary list of approved projects which would be passed on to Congress with the primary list, for favorable action if Congress saw fit to spend more money on such natural resources undertakings than was called for in the budget.

Members of Congress, in the past few days, have voiced the belief that it would be necessary to abandon the provision in the 1936 flood control act, requiring the States, by joint action, to provide all the land needed for the Government's projects.

Mr. Roosevelt talked with a delegation of 15 Senators and Representatives from Far Western States, headed by Senator Pope, of Idaho. Pope said there was a general discussion of reclamation, in relation to other phases of control of natural resources. He also emphasized dams being constructed or to be constructed would serve many purposes, power production, irrigation, flood control and others.

The proposal, Mr. Roosevelt emphasized, makes for orderly planning dealing with control, conservation and utilization of the natural resources, and ties together all the problems due to so-called acts of God and human neglect or extravagance. The President pointed out that all of the problems are found appearing together in the same picture every year. He said the program would dovetail with the omnibus flood control bill of last year, though it might be necessary to eliminate some of the hastily approved projects in the measure.

The cost would be low, he said; probably less than the amount now being spent on such planning.

Falls Within Limit.

It is intended that the entire program fall within the $500,000,000 limitation he has frequently mentioned to care for all public works, including harbor improvements. It would harmonize also with the Administration desire to aid the unemployed. The regional boards would include both State and Federal officials.

Division of the cost among Federal, State and local governments is a puzzling phase of the undertaking, Mr. Roosevelt said frankly. While he hesitates to have the Federal Government bear the full cost, still its proration has been found almost impossible.

As an illustration he cited the serious Connecticut River floods last spring. To prevent a repetition, Congress appropriated $10,000,000, conditioned upon the four States which had regularly suffered damage from the flood waters getting together and buying the land needed for projects to control the river at flood time. The States, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire, since have endeavored steadily, by means of a State compact, to apportion the cost among them and buy the needed land.

Supreme Court Usurps Rights Of Legislators, Authority Says

(Note: President Roosevelt's request for Congressional power to reform the United States Supreme Court is defended in the following dispatch by Harold J. Lasky, internationally known authority on constitutional law and political science and long a student of American affairs. The views are Mr. Lasky's, and are presented by this newspaper in fulfillment of its obligation to give its readers the benefit of many viewpoints on controversial subjects.—Editor.)

By Harold J. Laski.

(Professor of Political Science in the University of London.)
(World Copyright, 1937, by United Press.)

London, Feb. 9.—The outstanding need of some method, such as that proposed by President Roosevelt, whereby the people of the United States shall have assurance that during the next four years the New Deal will not be stricken into impotence by the Supreme Court is beyond all question.

Friends of the President will be glad that, with characteristic courage, he has gone into the field against judicial usurpation, which for the last 30 years simply enabled the Supreme Court by a majority decision to substitute its own views on what was necessary in legislation for that of dominant legislative opinion.

The great Oliver Wendell Holmes long ago warned the court against so hazardous a venture.

Delay Is Denounced.

The political prejudices of the court's majority have blinded them to the implications of the new age. They have long sought this conflict and it will be a wealthier United States when the obscurantism of the Supreme Court ceases to be identified with the American Constitution.

Most of the President's proposals do not need explanation or defense. It is obviously intolerable that an inferior court should be able to delay vital Federal legislation for a period often amounting to several years.

The real struggle will come over the President's proposal to appoint additional judges . . . The purists argue that the President is seeking to pack the court for purposes which should be effected by constitutional amendment.

Regarding this criticism, certain comments are necessary to see the President's action in the proper perspective. First, passange of an amendment might take years and, even when passed, would be subject to interpretation by the Supreme Court.

Second. It is not a new thing in the history of the Supreme Court to extend is numbers, and formerly this extension was welcomed by conservative opinion.

Third. There is nothing in the least novel in the appointment of American judges by reason of their political outlook. Examples were Theodore Roosevelt's appointment of Justice Holmes, also the conservative opposition to Justice Brandeis' appointment in 1916 because of his liberalism.

It is granted in the nature of the American Constitution — it is as Justice Hughes remarked, "what judges say it is"—that for a President to appoint men whose outlook is in general harmony with his own is a maxim of elementary prudence.

What is novel about President Roosevelt's proposal is the link he made between his right to nominate and the age of an incumbent of judicial office.

Here we must remember two things. The American courts are, in a special sense, a third and superior chamber of the Legislature and the danger of their operation always is that the postulates of one generation govern thereby the wishes of another.

The Supreme Court too long has forgotten Justice Holmes' warning that "it is a misfortune if a judge . . . forgets that what seem to him to be first principles are believed by half his fellow men to be wrong." Let us not forget how much the President's victory last November was an explicit condemnation of the Supreme Court.

Decisions "Unintelligible."

Much recent American jurisprudence is literally unintelligible except upon the assumption that the Constitution intended that judges should permanently safeguard the rights of property as understood in the age of laissez faire.

The Supreme Court majority has chosen to adopt a political philosophy whose major premise is the protection of capitalism from any serious control of the Federal Government.

It is not surprising that even such a moderate liberal as President Roosevelt should, after the experiences of four years, conclude that such a conception of judicial office was wholly at variance with the needs of a modern state.

Move to Quash Subpenas Halts Hutton Co. Case

Art Loom Remark Brings Demand for Recess of 3 to 6 Months.

By the Associated Press.

Testimony in the Government's stock manipulation case against W. E. Hutton & Co., members of the New York Exchange, halted suddenly yesterday when the affairs of Art Loom, a Philadelphia concern, were brought into the questioning.

Herbert J. Adair, a witness, had just identified the Hutton firm as purchasers of Atlas Tack Corporation stock, which the Government contends was "rigged."

"And when Hutton dropped Atlas Tack, after selling out at the top of the market, he took his customers into Art Loom for the very same purpose, didn't he?" demanded Jacob Gruber, SEC counsel.

Subpena Quashing Sought.

David W. Peck, attorney for Hutton, immediately moved to quash all subpenas in the case if Art Loom were not excluded from the record. He also demanded a recess of three months to six months to prepare answers unless his motion were sustained.

The commission's trial examiner instructed the opposing counsel to present memoranda and be prepared to argue the motion to quash today.

Government counsel sought throughout the day an admission from Adair that he and his associates had taken an option, without cost, on 37,631 shares of Atlas Tack common stock for which Hutton & Co. paid $9.75 a share and which it distributed to customers at $11.

Peck, Hutton's attorney, had said yesterday he would prove Hutton & Co. never owned a single share of Atlas.

Purchase Explained.

Under questioning by Gruber, Adair said he had purchased the tack corporation shares through the Bank of Manhattan, which in turn, was reimbursed by the Hutton firm.

Adair agreed in substance with Gruber's further statement that Adair and his associates had not "invested a single penny" in the stock.

The witness testified he had not exercised his right to the warrants, and at present held only 620 shares of the Atlas stock, the amount he obtained along with a cash consideration when the deal was made with the Hutton firm.

Gruber tried unsuccessfully to show Adair's only interest in acquiring the Atlas stock was to pass it along to Hutton & Co. at a commission, with the idea that it would be farmed out to the firm's customers.

Crowd of 500,000 Jams New Orleans In Gay Mardi Gras

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Feb. 9.—A half-million celebrants tramped the streets from dawn to dusk today when gay New Orleans cast aside everyday cares in honor of its century-old Mardi Gras.

Parades and individual celebrations were the order of the day as thousands of masked, costumed celebrants took over the city.

Claiming chief interest was the colorful procession of Rex, Lord of Misrule and King of the Whole Carnival.

Rex' 20 floats, depicting "nature, the first inventor," drew thunderous applause but King Zulu, ruler of the Negro carnival, almost stole the show with his three floats. The informality of King Zulu's parade coupled with multiple stops for gin and champagne, made it one of the day's most interesting sights.

When the St. Louis Cathedral clock struck midnight, Rex greeted the King of Comos, bringing an official end to carnival, and signalizing the advent of the 40-day Lenten season of "sackcloth and ashes."

Hearing Is Set Today to Alter District Zoning

Officials, Architects and Contractors Expected to Attend Session.

Proposals to alter present zoning regulations governing the height and lot occupancy of large public buildnigs are expected to attract a number of prominent local architects, Government officials and contractors to hearings before the District Zoning Commission today.

The commission will hear proposals to eliminate an existing exception to zoning laws which provides for the erection of 90-foot buildings on streets 110 feet wide, but reduces allowable lot occupancy 4 per cent for every 5 feet or fraction thereof of the building's height above 60 feet.

Under current zoning regulations, structures are permitted to occupy 75 per cent of the total lot space. The controversial exception, proposed for elimination, reduces the allowable lot occupancy to 51 per cent, it was pointed out.

And still another proposal amends the exception to provide that a building on a lot at the intersection of a street 110 feet or more wide and a street 90 feet in width shall not be erected to a height greater than 60 feet unless set back from the building line of the 90-foot street a distance of not less than the building's height over and above 60 feet.

Prominent leaders expected to appear at today's hearings include Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee; Charles Moore, of the Fine Arts Commission and George Oakley Totten, local architect.

Dear Brutus.

Those who witnessed Speaker Bankhead's very legitimate pride in his daughter's acting at the local opening of "Reflected Glory" must have derived from that little drama of human nature as much pure enjoyment as from the play itself.

Probably there is no relationship more ideal, and therefore more pleasurable, than that which exists between a father and daughter whose respective talents, while widely different, each is able to appreciate and respect. And in the case of Representative Bankhead and Tallulah there is no need for any reservation in the honors due and reciprocally accorded.

James M. Barrie, most sensitive of playwrights, carried the theme to heights of poignancy in "Dear Brutus," where the daughter, once so charmingly portrayed by Helen Hayes, was only a fantasy. The exquisite pathos in Barrie's Might-Have-Been had substantive beauty in the secondary drama played here on Monday night. And we can all share Speaker Bankhead's happiness in that.

Planning Federal Building.

The President's committee of five, announced yesterday to devise a five and ten year Federal building program for Washington, will doubtless draw heavily on the assistance of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. Whether it will materially supplement the planning commission's efforts or serve primarily to strengthen and promote the latter's program is not entirely clear. In any case, there is probably much Federal building to be done here in the next few years, and skilled direction of the development is imperative.

Last month a new building for the War Department was recommended by Mr. Roosevelt. The site suggested was in the "Northwest rectangle" where the new Interior Building is now nearing completion. A Navy Building is also planned for the same neighborhood. That will virtually fill the "rectangle." The planners will then move their attention to the area behind the Agriculture Building, where the Government owns property bought in 1930. A new General Accounting Office is tentatively scheduled for that location. But space for all the new offices needed is not available there. New sites will have to be obtained.

One considerable cause for hesitation in this appears, however. Though it is agreed that the present practice of housing Federal agencies in rented buildings is unsatisfactory, few definite plans for their permanent establishment can be laid down until the Brownlow committee's recommended reorganization program is acted upon. There would be small point, for example, in considering location of a permanent home for the Social Security Board until it becomes settled whether this agency will in the future be a departmental adjunct or a separate unit.

Alexander Pushkin.

Today marks the centenary of the death of Alexander Pushkin, Russia's greatest poet.

A product of the Czarist regime, Pushkin is now as much alive, and as much of a literary hero, in Soviet Russia as he is among the tens of thousands of Russian emigres scattered all over the world. During recent months, indeed, the whole Soviet Union seems to have been preparing for the present memorialization. The press, the state publishing departments, the Academy of Sciences, the Soviet literary organizations, have all displayed an unexampled interest in the event.

Popular acclamation of a poet and his poetry could scarcely go further. At the same time Russian emigre organizations have displayed no less activity. And to all—from the extreme reactionary Right through all the phases of liberalism and socialism down to the extreme communistic Left—Pushkin is acclaimed as their poet, and theirs alone.

Nothing better reveals the universality of the artist. Indeed, one can find in his writings such extremes as "The Ode to Liberty" and "To the Calumniators of Russia," the first glorifying tyrannicide and regicide; the latter extolling the victory of Russian troops over the Polish rebellion of 1830. Yet Pushkin was a friend of the Polish poet, Mickiewics, and he was on intimate terms with almost every leader of the Russian revolt of December 14, 1825.

This strongly confirms the abundant evidence that Pushkin was not really politically minded. And, therefore, it is the more ironic, and sordid, that the commemoration of his death should be capitalized for political purposes. A recent leading article in Izvestia speaks of the death of Pushkin, who was mortally wounded in a duel with an officer, as occurring at the hands of "agents of the reactionary aristocratic clique headed by the Russian Czar."

That description reveals the unscrupulous exploitation behind the Soviet Union's tribute to this Russian poet. But outside of Russia a higher type of homage can be rendered to a great artist whose immortality is assured by the literary heritage he has left for all mankind.

Leaving The Roots.

The action of the House in replacing the Red rider with a slightly less flagrant insult to the District schools will satisfy nobody. Those who see bolsheviks beneath every bed will not be propitiated by a mere restriction on advocacy of communism in the schools. Individuals who do not perceive the incongruity of trying to preserve democratic institutions by suppressing free speech and censoring education will certainly never realize the difference between teaching and advocacy.

Opponents of the Red rider, on the other hand, will be thoroughly disgusted over the way in which the House repudiated its own convictions by failing to vote for outright repeal. Speaker after speaker admitted during Monday's debate that the law was a mistake and denounced it as enforcing a policy of suppression that has greatly stimulated adolescent interest in communism. It was also acknowledged to be a gratuitous and outrageous affront to the school teachers of the District and to the School Board, whose ability to maintain adequate supervision over the teaching staff is called in question.

Yet despite the cumulative and telling indictment of the Red rider, the House was overcome by fear that a repeal vote would be misinterpreted by the people "back home" as evidence of sympathy with communistic doctrines. Hence the majority voted for a modified repeal that is hardly less offensive than the original Blanton rider. The proposed compromise still casts a reflection upon the patriotism of the teachers. It would still permit Congress to interfere unwarrantably in the affairs of the District school system. Moreover, it is even doubtful whether the modified measure would in practice permit realistic examination of subjects with which newspapers are daily called upon to deal.

Having acknowledged that the Red rider is thoroughly vicious in principle, and that it has only resulted in arousing interest in the subject which it aims to banish from the school curriculum, the House showed moral cowardice in failing to vote for outright repeal. Fortunately the way is still open for reconsideration. If the Senate will stick to its guns the House will have an opportunity to redeem itself. And Mrs. Norton has promised in that case to press for a vote that will put the entire membership on record.

That is the only sensible way to deal with such pernicious legislation as the Red rider. The House compromise makes a liberalizing gesture but fails utterly to meet the issue presented by this assault upon the integrity of the schools. Unless the rider can be erased from the statute books, in its entirety, it would be better to retain it in the present outrageous form. Then Washington will at least continue to be an undesirable example to other communities. And we shall at least have the indirect satisfaction of helping them to avoid the evils that flow from dictatorial legislation, inimical not only to the "American principles of public school education" but also to the fundamental principles upon which the American political system is founded.

Safety In The Air.

Little came out in the reports of the Bureau of Air Commerce safety conference to reassure a public which has lost much of its "air-mindedness" as a result of the many recent plane crashes.

It may be, of course, that the ten-point program laid before the conference by a committee of radio technicians alone justified the assembly. The layman is scarcely competent to judge. But at least he knows that failure of a beam or direction finder has been emphasized in more than one recent crash report. And his confidence in the air lines will revive perceptibly only when it can be announced that these devices have been perfected. The committee's proposal to co-ordinate the efforts of several company and Government engineers now working separately toward that objective should speed this day.

But encouragement from this part of the conference proceedings is largely offset by the charges heard that pilots have been forced to fly in bad weather. The air travel business is highly competitive, being still in its infancy, and every effort can naturally be expected from rival companies—particularly those operating on parallel routes—to present the best record of scheduled flights flown. But when human error is credited as the primary cause behind 16 of 26 recent crashes, it is disheartening to hear of a single pilot's judgment being overridden by head-office orders.

The charges, it is true, were weakly supported. Perhaps this was because few pilots would wish to place their jobs in jeopardy by testifying to coercion. But, weak as they are, they ought to be ruthlessly investigated. The Bureau of Air Commerce could do commercial aviation no greater service than to search out the fire, if any, behind this smoke of accusation.

The Fall Of Malaga.

The capture of Malaga constitutes the most important victory won by the Spanish Fascists since Toledo fell into their hands late in September. For over four months the civil war remained in a state of deadlock. The aid given the loyalists by Russia, and the moral and material support of the international socialist legion that came to the defense of Madrid, helped to offset the large-scale assistance rendered the rebels by Germany and Italy.

This deadlock has now been broken in a way which threatens disaster to the Madrid government. With the capture of Malaga Gen. Franco's forces are placed in a position where they can begin a flanking movement against the east coast cities still held by the loyalists, thereby completely isolating Madrid. But it would be ignoring the deeper significance of the capture of Malaga unless it is realized that primarily it was a victory won by Italy and Germany.

Those nations, in recent weeks, have been discussing at London how to make the nonintervention agreement effective by cutting off further shipments of arms and men to the contending elements in Spain. But all the time "volunteers" from the Fascist dictatorships have continued to slip into the Iberian peninsula. On the eve of the capture of Malaga it was reported that an additional 15,000 Italian troops had landed at Cadiz. The figure is probably a gross exaggeration. But so much smoke indicates some fire.

It is clear, therefore, that the strategy recently pursued by the Fascist powers has followed that which they have consistently maintained since the beginning of the Spanish civil war. While providing France and Great Britain with enough encouragement to keep alive the farcical London non-intervention committee, they have consistently aided Gen. Franco's revolt against the legally constituted Madrid government. When the rebel forces are on the eve of a final victory, but not until then, can Berlin and Rome be expected seriously to throw their weight on the side of real non-intervention.

This cynical strategy bids fair to succeed. Great Britain is evidently determined to close her eyes to any and all activities of the Fascist powers in Spain so long as the civil war can be kept from spreading to the rest of Europe. French public opinion is rather more restive. But so intent is Premier Blum on maintaining the entente with London that no challenge to the Fascist powers is likely to come from that quarter.

It is perhaps too early to see in the fall of Malaga the beginning of the end of the Spanish civil war. The power of resistance displayed by the radicals at Madrid may be demonstrated anew in the struggle that is now likely to be ushered in for the possession of Cartagena, Valencia and their hinterland. But, in the last analysis, even such heroic efforts as those made in the Madrid zone will be insufficient to prevent a rebel victory if Italy and Germany continue their large-scale intervention.

It is Mussolini's and Hitler's war. The capture of Malaga is their victory. And in all probability the Fascist Spain that they are seeking to establish will be their Spain.

Full Time Director.

With the appointment of Dr. James Allen Nolan as full-time director, the Washington Criminal Justice Association enters on a new and significant stage of its development.

During the formative period—it came into being only in May, 1936—the association was extremely fortunate in having as its acting director Mr. James Hepbron, nationally known criminologist and managing director of the Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission. Now that the spade work is done and the foundations carefully laid, Mr. Hepbron has resigned. Happily, he has agreed to remain as consultant.

While his successor is still a young man, he has already made an excellent reputation as a sociologist. Thoroughly familiar with Washington, he was assistant director of the Bureau of Rehabilitation and, until his present appointment, an executive in the Washington Council of Social Agencies. He has to his credit several careful studies of the prison situation in the District.

Since the Washington Criminal Justice Association is primarily designed to be a fact-finding organization, keeping a watchful eye on law enforcement and contributing its findings to the public and the authorities Dr. Nolan's background and experience will stand him in good stead. Nothing is more needed at the present time than the development of that public consciousness of crime problems which is a necessary preliminary to their solution.

What in the world do you suppose Mother Nature could have been thinking about when she arranged the theme song for a tomcat in love?

To Your Success, General!

The Supreme Court Issue

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the Editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents, brevity is requested. Letters are subject to condensation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: President Roosevelt's proposal to create six new Supreme Court justices is attacked by The Post as "a revolutionary design on the fundamental institutions of American Government;" as lacking popular mandate; as "a major alteration in the character of American Government;" and as undemocratic in method. Let us examine these criticisms dispassionately.

Enlargement of the Supreme Court to 15 members would not constitute, in the first place, a basic institutional change. It would leave the Court with all its powers and jurisdiction undisturbed. It would not curb its assumed power to invalidate acts of Congress or require a special majority to overthrow Federal laws or permit Congress to overrule its decisions.

Except in popular referenda, the people have no opportunity under our electoral system to vote on specific proposals. They vote for candidates for public office, and since campaigns are conducted on many issues, it cannot be said that an election constitutes a popular mandate for or against any particular measure. After President Roosevelt's overwhelming re-election, it was generally conceded, however, that he had received a popular mandate to go forward by any route he considered suitable. He received a blank check from the people to advance as he saw fit. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said, therefore, that his proposals for judicial reform lack public sanction.

Nor is the method of their submission to Congress undemocratic. For Congress is fresh from the people, and the members of Congress are the direct representatives of the people. This method is no less democratic than that of amending the Constitution which involves action, not by the people themselves, but by their representatives in Congress and the State Legislatures.

In theory ours is a system of checks and balances. In practice the judiciary and legislature check the executive, the executive and judiciary check the legislature, but there is no check on the Court except death. The Court checks through its exercise of the power of judicial review, nowhere explicitly granted it in the Constitution, but remaining unchecked, it upsets the theoretical balance of the Federal system. Nor is a system of checks and balances an indispensable feature of a democratic government. For in England the Parliament is supreme and the ministry is responsible to the Commons elected by the people.

If any "change by usurpation" has taken place in the United States, it is the growth of the judicial power effected by usurpation of power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. Sincere opponents of "change by usurpation" should direct their fire at this gratuitous assumption of power by the Supreme Court. Those who really believe in genuine democracy will recognize that the judicial invalidation of the acts of a popularly elected Legislature is highly undemocratic.

The proposed reform is therefore a very mild one. It is open to criticism, not because it goes too far, but because it does not go far enough. For it leaves untouched the power of judicial review, fatal to any genuine system of checks and balances and dangerous to democracy. In any event, it works no basic change in our institutional structure, regardless of the alarming outcry to the contrary. The move to retire Supreme Court justices at 70 has been urged hitherto by Taft, Hughes and McReynolds, among others. Aged justices whose received ideals are completely out of touch with the economic order of today would be wise to take the hint. The Court indeed may well heed the way in which the House of Lords was brought to heel by the threat of swamping it with newly created peers in 1911.

GEORGE B. GALLOWAY.
Washington, Feb. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your splendid editorial, "Time for a Showdown," which deserves the thanks and grateful appreciation of every true and patriotic American citizen, you have left but little to be further said on the subject.

The dullest and most stupid intellect can see through the camouflage of Roosevelt's communication to the Congress, and that his real purpose is to destroy the independence of the judiciary and make it subservient to his will. The despicable part of the matter is that, he is trying to do indirectly what he would not dare attempt directly by proposing an amendment to the Constitution. Should his nefarious scheme be accomplished there will no longer exist any protection to the liberties, and property rights of the people.

He probably feels no need to suggest a reorganization of the legislative branch of the Government, as the last and present Congress have shown that they are nothing but puppets to do the will of their master. If our institutions are safe from destruction by the ignoramuses and cowardly demogogues now in public life it will be due in large measure to the intelligent and courageous efforts of papers like The Post. AMERICAN.
Washington, Feb. 7.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Multitudes are now crying: Why did not Mr. Roosevelt voice his ideas on the Supreme Court—undoubtedly he has held them privately for a long time—in the electoral campaign? I think this can partly be answered by stating that a general-in-chief is under no compulsion to make known his strategy and tactical plans in advance.

Aside from whatever his personal motives may be, the President's main objective is apparently to seek greater co-operation between the executive and judicial branches. During the past few years we have witnessed much legislation declared unconstitutional. In some instances this has amounted to plain usurpation of the rights of the people and the prerogatives of the legislative branch.

Instead of attempting to increase the Court's membership, it has been suggested that amending the Constitution would be quite as effective. This procedure is fine as far as it goes, but I can see no limit to the number of amendments that might be necessary in view of the magnitude of the complex problems which present-day civilization entails.

I, for one, deem that no price is too much to ask in order that the United States may become more complementary in its three-fold form of government; and, above all, in the administration of the law, that justice be tempered with more humanity and mercy.

GUY d'AULBY.
Washington, Feb. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If President Roosevelt is permitted to pack the Supreme Court, in order to gain his personal objectives, a very dangerous precedent will have been established.

If a spineless Congress continues to cater to an aggressive, ambitious ruler, against its own better judgment, the American form of Government is doomed.

Are we to be ruled in the U. S. A. by personality or principle? The time has come to decide.

E. K. G.
Washington, Feb. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your comment of February 6 upon the President's judiciary message, you obviously fail to take into account one important fact: In the system of "checks and balances" set up by the Constitution, as the system now functions, there is no check upon the actions of the Court. If it wants to encroach upon the legislative power reserved to Congress, even if it wants to amend the Constitution by judicial interpretation, there is none to say it nay. Its word is supreme.

Now it will surely have to be admitted, even by Old Dealers, that the Constitution does not vest supreme power of Government in a majority of nine lawyers responsible only to themselves. This being a fact, your conclusion and Senator Borah's that the President should seek amendment of the Constitution seems to have a non-sequitur concealed in it somewhere. Does it require an amendment to take from the Court powers which are not given to it by the Constitution as now written?

RICHARD FRANCHOT.
Washington, Feb. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is gratifying to read your editorial in the February 6 issue, "Time for a Showdown."

It must be plain to the gullible who last fall during the campaign waxed indignant when told they were being misled by returning the "Destructionist" to power, where we are headed now. Surely they won't continue to be misled by evasive riders and whatnots as our old democratic form of government gives away to dictatorial-isms, leading on to European fascism, communism winding up in revolution. Revolution is the hated word, but once we destroy our old American form of government we will be inviting just such an ending. It has been said "as we grow older we become weaker and wiser."

PERRY F. SKINNER.
Washington, Feb. 7.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This is truly an era of damnation for all patriotic Democrats. None ever thought they would live to see their party tarnished by an Administration willing to sponsor political control of our revered Supreme Court by a wolfish effort garbed in sheep's clothing; willing to condone the seizure of property of lawful owners for a few pieces of silver; and willing to condone the stealing of coal and its transportation to market in interstate commerce for political expediency.

Page Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin and put the slogan "It can't happen here" in moth balls.

God save the Supreme Court and property of law-abiding citizens.

DEMOCRAT.
Washington, Feb. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Inasmuch as all lawyers are, under the long-established principles of common law, officers of the court to which they are admitted, and as the arrears in business exist, not in the Supreme Court of the United States, but in the lower Federal courts; and in view of the high degree of efficiency, legal and administrative, which has existed, and does continue to exist, in the Supreme Court of the United States under the able guidance of former Chief Justice Taft and the present Chief Justice Hughes; and inasmuch as the President has failed, for divers unknown reasons, and over a long perod of time, to appoint judges to fill vacancies in the lower Federal courts, I offer the following suggestion:

That Congress enact a law substantially as follows:

That whenever any vacancy in any of the District or Circuit Courts of Appeals of the United States shall, by reason of the failure of the President to appoint or the Senate to confirm, exist for a period of more than 60 calendar days while Congress is in session, it shall be the duty of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, with the advice and assistance of the associate justices, to designate a suitable member of the bar of said District or Circuit Court who is a resident of the State or district involved, to act as judge of said court until the vacancy shall be filled by appointment and confirmation or by recess appointment, as the case may be. Kindness In The Flood.

Chicago.

A LETTER from an Indiana woman protests that the generosity and personal sacrifice of the river town people in housing and feeding the unfortunate washouts of the Ohio River flood have been insufficiently recognized.

It seems to me that this phase of the disaster was pretty well covered, but perhaps it wasn't. If not it should be reported that the spirit of the people was very noble.

The women of the local Red Cross chapters, just ordinary women of the kind whom the census takers put down as housewife—turned to and cooked and served meals by hand to anyone who crawled off a log, and about the only credential that a human being needed was an appetite, of which there was no lack. They would rig up board tables on carpenters' horses in the basement of the courthouse, if it were high and dry, or in the Sunday school room of the church and start putting out as soon as the refugees hit town.

The doctors, too, sailed in and worked around the clock, for there were many bad colds and quite a lot of pneumonia, and there was a personal touch in all the relief work which showed the human race at its best.

It was interesting to observe this indiscriminate kindness and zeal to relieve want and suffering, because in other times many of these people had shown themselves capable of the most malignant cussedness toward their fellowmen.

Southern Indiana, around Evansville, was the point of infection of the Ku Klux Klan, which was fascism at its worst, and there were people engaged in the most trying relief work day and night for about a week who formerly had stayed up nights scheming ways to gang up on their neighbors socially and economically and stewing in the smelly juice of hatred.

No doubt about it, some of the people who gave the most self-sacrificing service in the flood relief, helping anyone who came along with a tender altruism consistent with the teachings of Jesus Christ, were Klucks in the old days.

And now that the water has fallen and the dramatic phase has passed the worst of the trouble starts, although probably it will receive little national notice. A flood when it is a flood is something to see, for it is exciting and in a sense clean. When the water goes down, however, it leaves slime and horrible objects on the beach. A man can fall in the water, get wet and dry without loss of dignity, but there is something humiliating about muck, and every man's little house and farm are his own problem.

Some pretty terrible slums have been washed out, and this would be a break for the country if there were any assurance that the reconstruction would not merely replace the slums with the salvage of hovels that were unfit for human habitation in the first place.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Interview With Adolf Hitler.

Q.—Would you mind saying a few words about the World War?

A.—What war?

Q.—The World War.

A.—Oh, you mean the one we had nothing to do with!

• • • •

Q.—You contend, do you not, that Germany was not responsible for it?

A.—Responsible? Why she didn't even know she was in it until somebody called her attention to it.

Q.—Germany didn't want war?

A.—Certainly not; she was opposed to it from the start, the records show.

Q.—What records?

A.—My records.

• • • •

Q.—The Germans invaded Luxemburg, didn't they?

A.—I understand something like that happened, but it was all an error; our troops didn't know where they were.

Q.—Why not?

A.—It was one of those hazy days.

• • • •

Q.—But you violated the neutrality of Belgium?

A.—That's pure fiction. The Germans never were in Belgium.

Q.—The records show otherwise.

A.—I disavow the records.

• • • •

Q.—What about the shooting of Nurse Cavell?

A.—What was the name again?

Q.—Cavell, Edith Cavell.

A.—Oh, you mean the nurse shot by the British!

Q.—History says she was shot by the Germans.

A.—I disavow history.

• • • •

Q.—What have you to say about the destruction of the Rheims Cathedral and others?

A.—They must have been destroyed by the British or French. Germany never harmed a hair of a cathedral's head.

Q.—But there were witnesses.

A.—I disavow witnesses!

Q.—Somewhere in the histories there are accounts of numerous bellicose ultimatums from the Kaiser.

A.—What Kaiser?

Q.—Kaiser Wilhelm.

A.—There was never any such person. It was all propaganda to place war guilt on Germany. The man supposed to be the warlike Kaiser was a British actor sent to Germany by the allies to behave in such a manner as to cause a war.

Q.—But the facts do not bear you out.

A.—Facts! Bah! I disavow 'em.

• • • • •

Q.—You have disavowed the peace treaty, the confession of war guilt and about everything else to which your country put her signature. There is a rumor that you will admit there was a World War and that Germany was in it.

A.—I disavow it!

Pushkin the Man

By Leonid I. Strakhovsky

ONE HUNDRED years ago today Alexander Sergeyevich Pushkin, Russia's greatest poet, died from the effects of a wound received two days previously in a duel with a young officer of the Imperial Guards by the name of George d'Anthes. "The sun of the Russian land was gone," a contemporary exclaimed. Indeed, there was that brilliant ever-penetrating life-giving light and warmth of the sun in Pushkin's poetry, which makes him immortal more than anything else.

In the brief span of his 38 years he had accomplished so much that even a full century of study of his works has far from exhausted the subject. No wonder that the occasion of the centenary of his death has provoked world-wide commemorations.

Pushkin was born on May 26, 1799, near Moscow. His father belonged to an old noble family of Russia which could trace its lineage six centuries back. His mother was a descendant of an Abyssinian prince who as a boy was brought to Russia in the time of Peter the Great. In later years Pushkin was just as proud of his African blood as of his ancient Russian heritage. In 1811, Pushkin entered the lyceum at Tsarskoye Selo, a new school just then founded by Emperor Alexander, I.

It was during his six-year stay at the lyceum that his poetic talents received their first start and were noted by his elders. It was also at the lyceum that Pushkin gave himself to friendship above all else, especially the friendship with Baron Anthony Delvig, a kindred spirit, gay and indolent, but a poet also, affection for whom was the most lasting emotion in Pushkin's life. The ardours of those school years are captured in the wonderful series of anniversary poems entitled "October the Nineteenth," the date of the foundation of the lyceum. The anniversary poem of 1825, which was to be the year of shattered youth and hope in Russia, has a pathos and beauty as haunting as is to be found anywhere in the works of Pushkin.

* * * *

SCHOOL was followed by three years of poetic ebullience and riotous living in St. Petersburg. In the fashion of aristocratic youth of the time, liberal ideas and moral licence went together. Pushkin burnt the candle at both ends. Yet, notwithstanding all his excesses, Pushkin retained a deep-seated sanity of mind, a sensibility that went far beyond dissipation and dandyism. In 1820 he wrote his first narrative poem, "Russian and Ludmilla" (out of which M. Glinka made a delightful opera), but before it was published Pushkin was sent into exile for verses flaunting defiance to tyrants and extolling regicides. For six years he was in banishment from St. Petersburg, four of these were spent in the south of Russia and the last two at Mikhailovskoye, a small estate of his mother.

It was during these years of exile that Pushkin's talent matured. The long narrative poems of this period, "The Prisoner of the Caucasus," "The Fountain of Bachihisaray" and "The Gypsies," are marvels of disciplined grace of vision and feeling. It was in 1823, that he began his novel in verse, "Eugene Onegin," and in 1825, that he wrote his magnificent tragedy, "Boris Godunov."

It was also during his exile that the Decembrist revolt occurred. Although Pushkin was never directly involved, he was on terms of intimacy with most of its leaders. For a while he feared arrest, but as the storm blew over, he regained confidence and appealed through his friends to the new tsar, Nicholas I, for lifting his banishment. In the fall of 1826, he was called to Moscow where he had a long interview with the new sovereign. From then on and until his untimely death he remained loyal to the regime.

* * * *

IN the spring of 1829 he fell wildly in love with a girl of 17, Nathalie Goncharova, made a proposal but was rejected. Two years later, however, he was accepted and married her. It was not altogether an unhappy marriage, although Nathalie's was a vain and flighty beauty. She was a favorite at Court, and Pushkin, great poet though he was, was familiar there rather as the young beauty's husband, a situation which he resented deeply. Still, during these years of married life, Pushkin wrote his incomparable tale, "The Golden Cockerel," "The Tale of the Fisherman and the Fish," "The Tale of Tsar Saltan" and the magnificent "The Bronze Horseman," as well as all of his more important prose works.

Although Pushkin the poet was still producing one masterpiece after another, Pushkin the man was nearing his perdition. He danced attendance upon Nathalie, as custom demanded, at Court functions and the like, and accompanied her on the tedious round of visits and balls. Nathalie, who bore him three children, was innocent of infidelity, yet provoked him to continuous and violent jealousy. Pushkin grew distrustful and suspicious. He longed to escape the senseless artifice of his life in fashionable society, but he remained a prisoner of his self-made prison. Then came the fatal end.

For almost a year Pushkin nursed a rage of suspicion against a certain Baron George d'Anthes, a French exile admitted by special imperial order to the Guards. His jealousy was all but extinguished by the latter's marriage with Nathalie's elder sister, Catherine, but was fanned into fresh flame by idle hands and malicious gossip. Pushkin's impetuous challege could not be turned aside. The duel was held in secret on the bank of the Neva River. d'Anthes fired first and Pushkin was mortally wounded. Yet, in his death he became immortal as he has said in one of his most beautiful poems, "The Monument:"

Nay, I shall not completely die;
in sacred strains
My soul survives my dust: forever is its worth.
And famous I shall be so long as there remains
A single poet on this earth.

BOOKS

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

Three Novels by D. C. Residents

Authors Reveal Varying Viewpoints On Life And Love.

"WIND-SWEPT," by Olga Moore. (Lippincott, $2.)

Nicely interlarded with wit and whimsy, this story of a child of the West is a moving narrative of a stormy life and a stormy love told with conviction, charm and unpretentious wisdom. The central character is Sara Kent, who was born in Wyoming early in the century, carved a career for herself in the newspaper game in New York more than a decade later, and as a young wife heads back to the West and the Tensleep ranch as the story ends.

As a child, Sara knows the tragedy of living in a home whose foundations are shattered by the separation of her parents. Loving the life of the open range as her father loves it, she prefers to live with him rather than her mother and grows up convinced that she has little in common with lovable, flighty Lily, whose marriage is wrecked by her craving for admiration and demonstrative love and a home surrounded by something besides wide open spaces.

Meanwhile, Sara's life deepens into womanhood through a series of complexities contributing to the story's arresting portrait of an intelligent, honest and thoroughly appealing girl. In depicting her and her loved ones the author has probed the depths of emotion beneath the surface of everyday living on a ranch, in a small town, in a college, in a newspaper office and in a bachelor apartment in New York that is eventually exchanged for a honeymoon hotel in the Swiss Alps.

The book has a strongly defined plot, but this never for once overshadows the figures around whom the story is woven. In other words, when you finish reading this novel you will remember each character, as a character, rather than in relation to what happened to Sara, or Jim, or Lily or Rick Lee in the course of the story. And this, as most of us remember, was the standard Thackery set for the value of fiction—the subjugation of plot to character portrayal.

From the beginning, through blizzards, snowstorms and drought when the slings and arrows of fortune shower mercilessly around Sara Kent, "Wind-Swept" is good reading. Untangling knots that are none of her tying, this tawny, slim, blue-eyed girl comes alive in each of her adventures; and whether she is faced with working her way through college or staving off starvation in New York, convincingly proves she is not afraid to head, like the buffalo, into the wind.

Some readers may find the story, which is essentially a moving one, too heavily—and perhaps too consciously—spiced with wisecracks, particularly in the latter half of the book. Others may object to the change in tempo and the quickening of character development as the scene shifts from the West to the East. But neither of these defects are obvious enough to detract materially from the story as a whole.

The author, Olga Moore, requires no introduction to readers of current fiction. Her short stories have appeared with amazing frequency in leading magazines the past few years. Born "in an old log house on the outskirts of Buffalo, Wyo.," Miss Moore now lives in Washington. Her husband, Dr. Carl F. Arnold, is assistant general counsel of the Federal Communications Commission.

HOPE RIDINGS MILLER.

ADRIANA SPADONI.

By Mary Barrett.

In periods of confusion that, historically, appear to precede any radical change in the structure of society, the average man finds himself lost. He is uncertain of the alternatives; he feels himself in the midst of powerful forces that he does not understand, a strong but, to him, directionless mass movement somewhat like Bergson's famous "thrust without a goal." He stands aside, he fights the current, he goes blindly with it. Until he can take hold of outward events with his mind—realize them—the honest man is unhappy in this potent fog and usually retreats within himself.

One of the highest functions of the artist has always been to stand clear of the confusion and resolve it for his fellows. He selects his materials from the life around him and shapes them to such a pattern that, through his expression, other men see themselves and outward event in focus again. In her sincere and serious novel "Not All Rivers," Adriana Spadoni addresses herself to one of the largest and most uncertain groups in America today. Perhaps hers is the first contemporary artistic expression of the position of the "muddled Liberal"—the man who sees greed, injustice and despair, but does not know where to stand—and, more important, an expression and analysis of the fallacy that underlies this position.

"I was ashamed of my safety, but I still believed it was mine. Now I know that I wasn't safe, that no one is safe. The battle's too fierce. We're all caught in it: those who work with their hands for day wages, those who work with their heads, and collect fees. The lawyer, the doctor, the artist, the scientist, the ditch-digger, the hod carrier, the man who runs a machine, the man who builds a cathedral—we're all in the fight together . . . Our superior education, our gentler manners, our long tradition of patience and fair play can't help us and, if we refuse to learn the lesson, in the end we will be destroyed * * *"

This quotation clearly states the conversion of a Liberal who has come to understand, after half a lifetime, that no one today can continue "blindly believing that justice will finally be yielded as a gift" and that the universal "revolt of the masses" has no direct and personal meaning for him. If not the first expression of this problem, Miss Spadoni's is certainly one of the most intelligent and intense. Without screaming or shouting, with no slogans or propaganda for any particular cause, she challenges sharply the people she knows best. She presents no set solution, no dream of a Utopian future, no particular choice of action. She asks us only to wake up, and to cut some path through our own uncertain. Uncovering the irrational, self-centered, confused state of mind that engenders the fallacy beneath the Liberal attitude, she holds up a clear mirror to those, complacently "conscious of good intentions," sincerely anxious to adjust themselves mentally to the struggle going on around them, who are, nevertheless, escaping life and jeopardizing the very values they stand for.

"Not All Rivers" is a comparatively short novel. Its apparent richness and credibility, the sense of many years adequately covered, are due to precise and beautiful writing. All the characters are artfully realized and become human beings for the reader. California is a tangible background for the action—with its fog and sirens, eucalyptus trees and sunshine; its factories, schools, business offices, bungalows and picket lines—and, without any isolated "fine" writing, always subtly present.

A pungent humor and facility for reproducing conversation are among Miss Spadoni's salient gifts. Anyone who has ever attended a labor union meeting, worked for a liberal newspaper, been hammered alike by conservative and radical will appreciate and relish the deft parodies of speech and manners. The novel is exciting and entertaining as well as being timely and significant.

For the first half of the book there is no hint of an important social theme. It is the gradual unfolding of the life of Rhoda Townsend, a gifted and ambitious girl, who wanted to find out about everything she met. Having worked her way through college, Rhoda marries a young and handsome professor and, with him, she faces life "with no anxiety, no uncertainty" until she finds him without any real purpose, any integrity. To Rhoda, life without honesty is unendurable, a form of death.

Through jobs and looking for jobs, through war years and after the war years, through a second marriage and association with a Liberal group, Rhoda's life moves toward self-understanding. She becomes aware of laboring men, of the spy system in industry, of purposeless people and people with ill-defined purposes, David Evans, a lawyer who has given his life to helping the "underdog" from the outside, becomes her second husband and together they come to the point of view expressed in the paragraph quoted above. Not until Rhoda finds "a wheel of purpose larger than the wheel of personal happiness" does she find rest. Human life is the harmonious revolution of this wheel within the wheel.

The strength of the novel lies in the simultaneous development of the woman and of the wheel of life outside her own. Never once does the narrative fall apart structurally. The underlying theme emerges naturally, growing louder and plainer until, at the end, the individual themes move into and become part of it, rivers that have reached the sea. Rhoda and David Evans are unique beings, yet symbols. They have found themselves and will go on as Sandburg's man the stumbler and finder, goes on,

man the dreamer of deep dreams, man the shaper and maker,
man the answerer.

"NOT ALL RIVERS," by Adriana Spadoni. (Doubleday, Doran, $2.50.)

Two Of The Books Set In America And One In France.

"ENCORE FOR LOVE," by Katharine Dunlap. (W. W. Morrow, $2.)

Whether or not Mrs. Dunlap ever read Dubose Heyward's admonition on the subject of regional novels, the fact remains that she has followed it wholeheartedly. It is Mr. Heyward's contention that regional literature, "even though it be avowedly fictional, should be unequivocal in its identification with its locale." To this end, he applies correct names to cities, streets and even outlying districts. Mrs. Dunlap goes him one better—she even gives her characters their originals' names in this, her first book.

"Encore for Love" is no great shakes when it comes to plot, character delineation, or brilliant writing. But it's full of a certain kind of charm which made me utterly forget that outside the weather is as silly as a straw hat in the snow.

In the first place, I don't believe Mrs. Dunlap cared very much about her characters, so how could she expect her readers to? True, she has instilled them with dignity, pride and a somewhat formal sense of humor, so that they do move quite realistically through their paces. There is Tante Helene, American-born, but as full of French traditions as if she had always lived at her chateau, Boisbrault; Oriane, her niece, who tells this story; Felicia, another niece, whose escapades furnish most of the quaint distinctions which Mrs. Dunlap delights in drawing between American subdebs and French jeune fille bien elevee; and Rene, the hero, who is so faintly drawn all through the book that I wondered how Oriane ever really got to know him well enough to love him. Maybe it was that very elusive quality which attracted her.

"Charming people all," the author seems to say. But obviously her heart isn't with them. It's in the French countryside; in the legends which linger around small villages lying in the shadows of great chateaux; in the courteous and kindly shopkeepers; in the peace of pastorale life. The entire tenor of her book is one of nostalgia—for soft summer rains falling on the "stained and lichened slates of the manor house;" for June nights when "beyond the clumps of waning peonies and budding lupins, neat frosted-green rows of new peas are all starred with white blossoms."

The good earth is Mrs. Dunlap's thesis, whether intentionally or accidentally. And although it is with the inhabitants and visitors at Boisbrault that this story concerns itself, you feel upon coming to the happy ending that the important thing is that Boisbrault will remain in loving hands.

Mrs. Dunlap, a Washingtonian, spends her summers in France. "Life as lived there," she told me the other day, "gave me the idea for the book, and I enjoyed writing it, there on the spot. I felt a little as though the characters enjoyed being there too—I never felt more exhilarated than I did on the lovely July afternoon when I finished the last chapter."

There is no doubt that Katherine Dunlap not only loves the land which she seasonally adopts, but that she has managed to impart a great deal of its charm to her readers. One almost feels that it is a pity she did not leave the humans out altogether and concentrate on the artichokes, asparagus and "huge strawberries, just turning crimson under their ducal leaves."

BETT HOOPER.

Covered Wagon Valor

Conrad Richter Writes of Fortitude of 'Nesters' in Fight Against Nature.

"THE SEA OF GRASS," by Conrad Richter. (Knopf, $1.25.)

In this day and age when so much literature is being produced by the pound rather than by the page it is refreshing to come across a book as simple and unpretentious as "The Sea of Grass."

Conrad Richter is a past master at handling early Americana, in fact he has written a book of short stories bearing that title, and much of the background that makes his work both human and essentially real comes from those "endless small authenticities" which he has gathered from old men and old women who lived through the sixties and seventies or even before.

To a certain degree he has some of the qualities of Bret Harte. His prose is vigorous and sturdy. It possesses a facile touch of poetry as evanescent as the "candlelight of a world that had vanished like last year's snows," and in Col. Jim Brewton, last survival of the ancient regime of pioneers who settled Arizona when she was still an unknown territory, he has evoked a nature as fierce and gallant as the land of which he writes.

One is not inclined to quibble when one reads: " * * * the free wild life we lived on that shaggy prairie was to me the life of the gods." Nor, in view of recent and terrifying dust storms, does one take issue with those bitter and prophetic words: "You can keep the nesters from being blown away but God himself can't the prairie." For aside from the minor strains—Hal the nephew to whose youthful impressions we owe the story, Lutie who came and went away and came back again as only those who are well loved may do, and the story of young Brock that ended in tragedy—the major theme is the last stand of a man against the encroachments of a civilization that to him and his kind spelled doom.

When emigrants drove their covered wagons onto the broad ranges of the southwest they found in Col. Brewton a relentless and implacable foe. When as "nesters" they chose to settle on the big vega some 7,000 feet above the sea, to plow it up for crops that would die for lack of rain, to kill the grass that would grow and without which the cattle would starve, and to add insult to injury by killing those cattle in order to feed their families, they invited the rude justice that was summarily meted out to them. That they triumphed in the end is an historical fact.

Like tenacious parasites they clung through drought and famine, supported and incited by Brice Chamberlain whose only claim to power seemed to lie in his own words: "* * * the President is my friend." He seduced the colonel's wife Lutie and then deserted her.

At times there are flashes of wry humor, as when the colonel himself drove Lutie to the station when she decided to leave him for a supposedly unknown but very well suspected lover. That he also remained upon the station platform long enough to intimidate the lily livered gentleman and forced Lutie to disappear "alone and gallant" into the then remote world that lay east of the Rockies. When she returned after 15 years she found her youngest and ill-begotten son Brock shot to death as an outlaw.

But poignant as the other characters may be there is none so touchingly human as the gaunt old colonel himself and perhaps nothing reveals the stark simplicity of his nature more clearly than the closing confidence to his nephew: "It was a hard thing for a lady to go through, Hal."

IRENE HOLT.

Skiing

"SKIING FOR ALL," by Otto Schniebs. (Leisure League of America, New York City, $.25.)

Now that it's snowed at last, there's some point to a book on skiing. This isn't really a book—just a pamphlet. And the best part of it is not its reading but its illustrations. Otto Schniebs, who used to coach the Dartmouth winter sports teams that cleaned up regularly at Placid and in the Laurentians, has a good knack for sketching. With every paragraph explaining stems and turns, there is a slow-motion strip of drawings that tells the story graphically.

One last thing: Schniebs' book must take a fall for its foreign words. Not only is every page plastered with "heils" and "vorlages," but there is even a glossary of ski terms in the back. Skiing, whatever its origins, has at least taken out its naturalization papers in this country. To persist in still talking of a "langlauf" and "hochgebirge" smacks of sedition. It's called "herring-boning" and "tail wagging"—why, then, all this nonsense about "passgangs" and "Gamaschens?"

JOHN M. CLARK.

Book Ends

By Bett Hooper.

I went out to 1758 K street to talk with Katharine Dunlap about her new book, "Encore for Love" . . . It was like trying to gather up raduim . . . Mrs. Dunlap is little, and as Charles MacArthur once said about Helen Hays, she "lilts" . . . And she looks like Princess Elizabeth of England . . . the one who used to wear jonquil-colored frocks, thereby setting the style for all British youngsters, who were glad to get out of the conventional pinks and blues . . . As I suspected, Mrs. Dunlap wrote the book out of her own experiences . . . She even picked up her own chateau bodily and transplanted it into paragraphs . . . She hopes the French villagers whose names she used never see the book . . . She picked this title bcause someone suggested that she incorporate at least one French word . . . a word that everybody knew even though they'd never learned to count up to deux in French . . . She has been ever so many places has this neat little author . . . Her father was an officer and she married one . . . So she has spent a great deal of her life thinking up how to make alien rooms look early American . . . She even spent a winter in Guam . . . Even now she seems slightly surprised by that fact . . . And I don't wonder . . . I'd be surprised, too, seeing all that neatness silhouetted against a patch of sword grass . . . Then China . . . Then France . . . Where she found the chateau that is "Boisbrault" in her book . . . Where she wrote her book "Encore for Love" . . . It's neat and charming, too . . .

Off the Record.

Rep. Cooley's Brother Killed In Auto Crash

Woman Driver Badly Hurt; PWA Auditor Dies on Way to N. C.

Hubert Bernard Cooley, brother of Representative Harold D. Cooley, of North Carolina, and an auditor for the Public Works Administration, was killed in an automobile accident while driving from Washington to his home in Nashville, N. C., the Representative's office here was advised yesterday.

The accident occurred when the auto in which he was a passenger crashed into a bridge abutment on the North Carolina-Virginia line about 20 miles north of Henderson, N. C.

Miss Gloria Davenport, who lived in the Capital while temporarily employed in one of the Government agencies, was driving the machine, according to North Carolina officers. She was taken to a hospital in Henderson unconscious and apparently critically injured, according to the Associated Press.

Persons living at 1509 Sixteenth street northwest, where Miss Davenport lived, said she and Cooley had been friends during their residence here. They said her home was in New Jersey.

Cooley had been employed by the PWA here and in New York City for two years. Previously he worked for the Farm Credit Administration.

Representative Cooley is serving his third term as a Representative of the Fourth North Carolina District.

Cooley was 45 years old. His parents, the late Roger A. P. Cooley and Mrs. Hattie Cooley, were well known in North Carolina. He is survived by another brother, Horace C. Cooley, of Raleigh, and two sisters, Mrs. B. J. Downey, of Nashville and Mrs. W. M. Sanders, of Smithfield.

Missing Cashier Sought by Police; Amnesia Feared

Police last night launched a search for William E. Seipp, 42-year-old cashier at the Upper Marlboro branch of the County Trust Co. of Maryland, who disappeared under mysterious circumstances Monday afternoon.

Seipp left the bank shortly before it closed Monday after telling his fellow workers he would be back in a few minutes. He has not been seen since.

Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, bank president, said a check of the company's accounts had revealed they were balanced. He advanced the belief that worry over illness in his family had caused Seipp to suffer a lapse of memory. The missing cashier, an employe of the bank for 15 years, is the father of three children, the oldest 14.

Sentor Sasscer said that recently the youngest child, 8-year-old Charles, had been seriously ill and that Seipp had given blood for a number of transfusions.

At the time of his disappearance, Seipp was driving a Chevrolet sedan, tag number 220-974. He is 5 feet 11 inches tall, of slight build, and was wearing a dark blue suit, a dark overcoat and a brown slouch hat.

Judge Declines Ruling On Definition of 'Negro'

White Plains, N. Y., Feb. 9 (AP).—Supreme Court Justice Raymond E. Aldrich decided not to determine the legal definition of "Negro" today as he refused to issue a temporary injunction barring Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Cockburn, natives of the Bahamas, from their $20,000 home.

Determination of the term, therefore, will await trial of the suit of Mrs. Marion A. Ridgway to oust the Cockburns from a section of the city where ownership and occupancy of homes is forbidden to colored persons.

Tel Aviv, Palestine, Feb. 9 (AP).—Dr. A. Litwak, Tel Aviv psychiatrist, was convicted today of having held a young American, Miss Hiya Rubin, in a chicken coop for several months in 1935.

He was sentenced to one year in jail.

Dr. Litwak was charged with illegal detention and malpractice for confining Miss Rubin on his orange ranch. Officers of the government criminal investigation department found the young woman, only partly clothed and undernourished.

Prelate to Participate In Holy Week Services

Vatican City, Feb. 9 (AP).—Pope Pius XI, hoping soon to regain use of his legs, made plans tonight to participate in holy week services of the Lenten season which begins tomorrow.

Regardless of whether he will be able to walk, the Pontiff told his aides he wanted the services to be conducted as usual and that he would take part as his illness permits. The Pope rested today after a troubled night and the pain in his legs bothered him only occasionally.

Roosevelt Names Committee To Study Federal Space Needs

Growing Concern Over Housing Problem Here Indicated in Formation of Group; Ickes Is Appointed Chairman.

Indicating his growing concern over the Federal housing problem in Washington, President Roosevelt yesterday announced appointment of an "informal committee" to survey space needs and report to him on a five and ten year building program.

The White House action came little more than two weeks after the President cited the necessity of taking steps to remedy the shortage of Government office buildings.

Members of the committee are Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior; Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Aklahoma; Representative Ross A. Collins, of Mississippi Rear Admiral Christian J. Peoples, procurement director of the Treasury Department, and Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Ickes Heads Group.

Ickes will serve as chairman of the group. As titular head of the division of Government space control, a National Park Service unit, he has charge of the allotment of quarters in Federally owned and rented buildings alike to the vast majority of departments, bureaus and independent agencies.

Thomas and Collins are active in District affairs, being chairmen of the Senate and House sub-committees on District appropriations, respectively.

Admiral Peoples, as chief of the Treasury's procurement division, is the Federal Government's "building boss." Delano, uncle of the President, heads a commission which has played a vital part in the unprecedented public building program here in the last decade.

In his letter to the five commjttee members, the President said:

"It is hoped that the expert and detailed services to be rendered can be supplied without extra cost to the Government by the Department of the Interior, the Administration of Public Works, the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, the National Resources Committee and the Parks and Planning Commission."

Ickes is PWA administrator and chairman of the Resources Committee, of which Delano is vice chairman.

A Formidable Problem.

Although Congress has appropriated millions of dollars for Federal structures since the Coolidge administration and more millions is represented by additional projects now under way, the newly appointed committee still will confront a formidable housing problem.

Probably the agency in the most distressing circumstances, in this respect, is the Social Security Board, certain branches of which had to be set up in Baltimore because no space was available here.

The Federal Government's rent bill is now in excess of $2,000,000 a year, with the demand for suitable accommodations in privately owned buildings greater than the supply.

The committee doubtless will look into the establishment of departmental bureaus and independent agencies in rented, remodeled mansions, a development of the last three years, and the congestion which prevails in numerous buildings, both owned and leased.

Claims Exceed Doheny Estate by 6 Millions

Los Angeles, Feb. 9 (AP).—An appraisement of the estate of E. L. Doheny, oil magnate, filed in probate court today, valued the holdings at $9,042,653, against which claims totaling $15,014,049, have been filed.

The executors said claims totaling about $14,000,000, have been rejected and are still in litigation in Federal courts.

Fired City Head Keeps Keys; Refuses to Quit

Muskogee, Okla., Feb. 9.—P. B. Bostic held the city managership appointment today, but W. H. Pritchett, out last night, held the keys to the office and said he intended to keep them.

"I'm going to carry on as city manager," said Pritchett, insisting nine council votes are necessary to remove a city manager. Eight councilmen voted for his removal.

Adopted Jewish Child Puzzles Nazi Parents

Duesseldorf, Germany, Feb. 9 (AP). Novel legal complications have arisen here over the responsibilities of a Nazi married couple toward their adopted child, whose father, it turned out, was a Jew.

"Imagine the foster parents' horror," Nazi newspapers said, "when in the course of time the child developed typically Jewish characteristics, and investigations showed its father was a Jew."

Acrobatic Trio Features Show At the Lotus

George Andre Act Highlights Paul Florenz Review at D. C. Nightclub.

By Chanticleer.

Its another Paul Florenz show at the Lotus this week, with the producer apparently trying to outdo himself in the selection of a chorus of lovelies, and costumes. Featured headliners are George Andre Trio in a waltz acrobatic and sizzling adagio with plenty of swings and high flings.

Then there's Walter Long, teamed with the Lee Sisters in a medley of soft shoe, acrobatics and songs. And Flo Bert, introduced in an entirely new rhythm swing, and Evelyn Knight singing your latest popular ditties.

Al Norton, of course, is emmceeing it all with Bill Strickland and his Capitolians providing the background music and the rhythms for your dancing.

The lounge is staying open longer than ever before—at the Mayflower. Which means among other things that there's even more time for those specialties that Sidney's men indulge in between dance groups. Burras Williams at the piano is the highlight of these little informal things. Buddy Harmon, Bobby Simpson and Sid Cowan are the vocalists.

The first thing that Judith Lawton did when she arrived in Washington for her current engagement at the Carlton's El Patio was to hire a drive-it-yourself auto. For sightseeing. And Judith's done a little sight-seeing in the last year—all the way from Nassau to Los Angeles in ye olde better hostelries.

Mel Anderson's remarkable memory is partly responsible for the popularity of Arthur Warren's work at Wardman Park's Metronome Room. He's a vocalist with the group and not only remembers the old ones you like to hear but even keeps in mind the favorites of the current crop of customers.

The Lorrains are headlining the floor show at La Paree this week—in a Rhapsody of Rhythm. The Lorraines specialize in a military tap. Then there's Barbara Long in a rhythm routine; George Horn, with his "little boys"—Oscar and Henry presenting a really clever ventriloquist act, and a chorus of swing high, wide and handsome gals.

Little Sam Robbins and his orchestra have come to the Pall Mall Room of the Raleigh. Maestro Robbins is the kind of a guy who keeps the feet in rhythm even though you've got them under the table for the nonce. You may be interested in knowing that he's a Baltimore boy and a graduate of Peabody; vibrates syncopation and positively infects the very atmosphere with the old pepperino. Has been most recently at the McAlpin in New York and the Somerset in Boston.

Don't forget that Wednesday night means an old-fashioned shindig at the Dude Ranch. Everything's rustic for this one night of the week with hayseed, apple cider and Virginia reels the order of things. Waitresses in overalls.

Emil Wadimoff, producer of those sketches at the Russian Troika, is also a playwright, bass and guitarist of no small talents. His voice is unusually powerful—and when he really sings seriously the glasses on the tables vibrate. Mischa Markoff, the master of ceremonies, is his only rival in this singing regard.

Helen Elly, already widely known to radio audiences in these precincts, is the dynamic little blonde songstress at the Cocoanut Grove. She sings blues all over the registers of the piano. Lee and Coty O'Neill are back on the bill with tap dances—and Ray Beck is at this spot after an absence from the after-darkeries of Washington for several months.

The place for that chicken dinner might well be Stone Villa Inn, on the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway just below Alexandria. Music for dancing by Charlie Jewel and his orchestra . . . Leo Lisee and Jack Campbell on view at the Mayfair and particularly recommended after the theater . . . Johnny Rice and orchestra at Brinkley's nightly after 9 . . . Johnny Bright, the local bandsman, is now master of ceremonies at Maryland Club Gardens. He's a member of Fran Trappe's Gardens Orchestra, with Kitty Dengler, Lyons Twins and Josephine as floor attractions.

Its true Helen Malcolm and the Royal Hawaiians are making longtime stands at the Ambassador's Hi-Hat, but the goings-on certainly change from one day to another. One reason is Miss Malcolm's wide repertoire of songs—ranging from the intimate tableside variety to that lovely old timer, "My Man." Right now the Royal Hawaiians, under the direction of David Naeole, jr., are concentrating on "Little Old Lady."

Child Bride Case Parents Deny Plot

Watertown, N. Y., Feb. 9 (AP).—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Roshia, parents of Watertown's child bride, pleaded innocent today to conspiracy charges arising out of their daughter's marriage to a 19-year-old factory worker.

Police also arraigned Arthur Roshia, the girl's older brother, on a charge of criminal assault, second degree, adjourned his case to Thursday and placed him in jail.

They said his 14-year-old daughter was the complainant.

Later police arrested William Pickett, 67, maternal grandfather of the "child bride" and of the 14-year-old girl, and arraigned him on a criminal charge, accusing him of having had illegal intimacies with a person they refused to identify.

Friendly Informality, Bright Uniforms Feature Army and Navy Reception at Executive Mansion

President, Mrs. Roosevelt Entertain at Dinner for Young People.

Gen. and Mrs. Craig Head Distinguished Gathering.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Uniforms—those of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps—and a spirit of friendliness characteristic of parties at which service people gather, dominated the annual Army and Navy reception at the White House last night. It was the closing function of the social season at the Executive Mansion.

Officers who had not seen each other since their days together at some distant post exchanged greetings and news of mutual friends. Others who had seen service at the same places in former years talked in small groups. Classmates at Annapolis and West Point held impromptu reunions and, when all of the guests had been received and dancing began in the East Room, nearly everyone stayed to dance until the music stopped.

Preceding the reception, a dinner for a group of young people was given by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Willert, Mr. and Mrs. Churchill Carmalt, Mr. Dudley Donald, Miss Patricia Emmet and Mr. Grenville T. Emmet, jr., of New York, son and daughter of the United States Minister to the Netherlands; Miss Judith Honeyman, Mr. W. Forbes Morgan, jr., Mr. Edward Macauley, jr., Miss Katherine Newbold, Miss Elia O'Day, Miss Jane Pope, Miss Elizabeth Sibley, Miss Marguerite LeHand, Lieut. Edward Woodyard, Lieut. Jesse Auton and Lieut. William H. Watson.

Marine Band Plays.

The reception was at 9 o'clock. At that hour the Marine Band with its red blouses played the traditional "Hail to the Chief" as the President and Mrs. Roosevelt entered, the President accompanied by Col. Edwin M. Watson, U. S. A., and Mrs. Roosevelt on the arm of Capt. Paul Bastedo.

Mrs. Roosevelt wore a gown of white lame, with a diamond necklace, a diamond brooch, and a corsage of lavender orchids. The Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull followed in the procession, Mrs. Hull in a gown of blush satin. Next came the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Mrs. Morgenthau wearing wisteria lace, with a three-tiered skirt; and then Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, on the arm of the Secretary of War, Mr. Harry H. Woodring. Mrs. Swanson wore silver lame with a sash of flame-colored chiffon. The Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mrs. Wallace in black lace and velvet, were followed by the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Mrs. Roper wearing pewter lame, and the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins, in black velvet with a long scarf and cape of red, who entered with Mr. James Roosevelt on her right and Capt. John Reybold, one of the White House aides, on her left.

The procession, led by "the four horsemen," four of the aides, Capt. William Ritchie, Lieut. T. H. Hedderman, Lieut. Robert N. Downes and Lieut. George Grunert, went, as is customary, from the dining room, across the hall, through the red room and into the blue room, where the guests were received.

All of the Cabinet members with the exception of the Secretary of War and Mrs. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, remained in the red room. These two, as representatives of the Army and Navy, led the guests as they came from the east room to be greeted by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt. Behind them were the Chief of Staff of the Army and Mrs. Malin Craig, Mrs. Craig wearing a gown of eggshell satin, made with a skirt gathered in back and falling in a long, full train, and flowers at the neck, and Gen. Craig, in full dress uniform.

Next were the Chief of Naval Operations and Mrs. William D. Leahy, the latter wearing a gown of gold and silver brocade on a rose-colored ground, made with a short train. The Maj. Gen. Commandant of the Marine Corps and Mrs. Thomas Holcomb were next in rank, Mrs. Holcomb wearing a gown of rose-colored chiffon trimmed in brilliants and made with a short train. They had entertained at dinner preceding the reception.

The Pettingills Attend.

The Commandant of the Navy Yard and Mrs. George T. Pettingill were among the early arrivals, Mrs. Pettingill wearing a black gown trimmed in sequins. Mrs. Emory Land, who arrived with Rear Admiral Land, wore a deep-red taffeta dress trimmed in bowknots of velvet.

Among others from the Navy were Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews and Mrs. Andrews, the latter in black satin with a train, accompanied by their daughter, Miss Frances Andrews, who wore gray net trimmed in coral velvet, and their house guest, Miss Jane Watson, of New York, who wore blue taffeta; Rear Admiral and Mrs. Norman Murray Smith, Mrs. Smith in a gown of antique gold satin, with which she wore antique gold earrings and necklace; Lieut. A. D. Ayrault, U. S. N., aide to Admiral Leahy, accompanied by Mrs. Ayrault, who wore brown lace; Rear Admiral and Mrs. Fred Johnson, Mrs. Johnson gowned in black taffeta with a gold-flowered design.

Among those from the Army were the Chief of Infantry and Mrs. Edward Croft, who were accompanied by their son, Mr. Edward Croft, jr., and Col. and Mrs. J. R. Woolnough. Mrs. Croft wore a gown of pink satin, and Mrs. Woolnough was in flame-colored velvet. Others included the Chief of Chaplains and Mrs. Alva J. Brasted, the Commandant of Fort Myer and Mrs. Jonathan M. Wainright, the latter in black velvet, who arrived with Col. and Mrs. John Milliken, also of Fort Myer; the Chief of Coast Artillery and Mrs. Archibald H. Sunderland; Col. and Mrs. Brady C. Ruttencutter, Mrs. Ruttencutter in blue net over tight-fitting blue taffeta and wearing a strand of pearls and a Juliet cap; Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Frederick W. Boschen, Mrs. Boschen in peach-colored satin with flowers on one shoulder, shading from purple to crimson; the Judge Advocate General of the Army and Mrs. Arthur W. THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Mrs. Roosevelt is still as busy as ever. Tomorrow afternoon she will attend the exhibition and sale of arts and crafts at Garfinckel's for the benefit of flood sufferers.

Speaking of arts and crafts, Mrs. William Denman, who with her husband has only recently arrived for a short visit, had some interesting things to say about the exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1939. Even the prospect of constructing an island in the middle of the bay especially for the affair seems simple in contrast to discovering some way of persuading the Indians to stage some of their rarely seen dances and ceremonials, she said. There is to be definite emphasis on Indian art and Indian lore.

Later, at her conference Mrs. Roosevelt enumerated her social activities and mentioned the "Farley dinner" Monday. Frowning ever so slightly, she said that she really did not know much about it—whether it was to be stag or mixed. As she was musing on this her "right hand lady," Mrs. Scheider, spoke up, saying, "Oh, yes, we do go to that." Thereby indicating the ladies would be present.

• • • •

Now it can be told! One of the most thrilling engagements to be announced in a long, long time will come forth with all the formal trimmings tomorrow morning. The principals are lovely Margaret McMullen, who has enjoyed a very gay time here since her debut two seasons ago, and Ted Wingo. It was one of those whirlwind courtships, starting at the Black and White ball, that old tried and true starter of romances, when Ted saw Meg dancing by and asked Lyle O'Rourke—his neighbor in the stag line—if he knew her. Lyle did, and thus they met.

Meg's ring, now glistening on her left hand, is a work of art in addition to being nicely wound round with family traditions. The stones number five (and huge ones, too), which have been in the Wingo family for some years.

Just about the first thing seen by guests of Mrs. Robert E. Lee's delightful tea party yesterday afternoon was a cheery, roaring fire. Mrs. Lee, who was wearing a black crepe afternoon gown trimmed with a green just matching her suede gloves, received with her house guest, Mrs. Francis du Pont, in black lace, and Mrs. Gustav Middleton, from North Carolina, in ashes of roses moire.

In the central salon, Miss Miller was taking her turn serving the St. Cecelia punch. At one side, the Ambassador of Germany, Herr Hans Luther; Miss Margaret Gage and the Minister of Panama, Dr. Boyd, were conversing in German. Nearby the Acting Postmaster General and Mrs. W. W. Howes were talking to friends just before continuing onto Mrs. Daniel C. Roper's party.

The Minister of Greece, Mr. Demetrios Sicilianos, looked with envious eyes at the platter of plum-sized olives passed him. But they were not for him, for he has made a resolution to eat only the olives from his own hundred or more trees in Greece from where he receives regular shipments.

In the dining room where the buffet table was decorated with white snapdragons and red carnations and lighted by scarlet tapers in silver candlesticks were the Minister of Guatemala and Mme. Recinos, Mme. Alfaro, wife of the Ambassador of Ecuador; Mrs. William S. Culbertson, Mr. and Mrs. Eldon King, Mr. and Mrs. Risley Brown, Mrs. Arthur H. Tirrell and her daughter, Dorothy; Mrs. Francis Parkinson Keyes, the Rev. Meade Bolton McBryde, Mrs. Morris Evans, Morris Evans, jr., Meta Morris Evans (who by the way wears the most fascinating Italian cape), the Minister of Venezuela, Senor Escalante; Miss Elizabeth Howry and Miss Cornelia Bowie.

Bakery Employe In Yellow Truck Lost for 4 Days

By the Associated Press.

Frederick, Md., Feb. 9.—Frederick County police today sought some trace of William Bayes, bakery employe who drove his newly painted yellow truck into Montgomery County four days ago and failed to return.

"It is inconceivable that the truck could be driven through the country all this time without being noticed," said Charles S. Treich, bakery manager. He added it had just been painted "all bright and yellow."

Bayes, an employe of Herschberger's, Inc., went into Montgomery County on his regular run. His route passed through Rockville and Kensington.

"There is a good deal of woody country through there where a truck might be concealed, but we tried to cover the ground thoroughly in searching for it," Treich said.

A Woman's NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Feb. 9.

THE AGE deadline for secretaries is causing much worry and heartburning here at present—and it is truly a vital matter to many thousands of local women who are fighting hard and constantly to maintain their personal and financial independence, in a business world that seems to grow harder day by day.

ALICE HUGHES.

An authority on this subject is Gwynne Ross, who as a specialist with the vocational service agency has placed thousands of New York girls. And she's very pessimistic about the whole thing.

"Nobody wants the older girls, and there seems to be nothing we can do about it," she tells me. "A few years ago we could place secretaries at 45. Now 30 seems to be the limit."

Miss Ross feels that stenography should be only an opening wedge into positions of more interest and responsibility, anyway—and I surely think she is correct in theory. Just how the girls are going to employ that wedge is another and knottier problem.

• • • •

She has a few very interesting ideas on why girls make bad impressions at their first interviews with prospective employers. Most important, she believes, is the fact that they are apt to gabble too much—to be so anxious to sell themselves that they overdo it. And certainly garrulity for no particular reason is not going to impress a business man favorably! Dark clothes, a quiet manner, a check-rain on the tongue—these are vital, says Miss Gwynne. But oh, that deadline at 30! How can that be whipped?

• • • •

They're building a newsreel theater right in our Grand Central deppo, which will absolutely complete the appointments of that astonishing place. Now it has everything, from hotels and restaurants to modest amusement. But its greatest possession is, of course, the traveling public, which remains the greatest show on earth . . .

• • • •

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne asked Igor Stravinsky to write a score for a show for their use next season, but the Russian declined with thanks. He conducted our Philharmonic for two weeks to great acclaim . . .

• • • •

The report is current here that Gilbert Miller, the theatrical producer who functions both here and in London, is to be knighted by the new king. At any rate, it is said that Miller will become a British citizen, owing to the terrific burden of carrying the taxes in the two nations where he operates. . . .

• • • •

Betty Lawford, the pretty blonde who bathes nightly on the stage in the Claire Boothe hit, "The Women," now rejoices in the nickname, "Sudsy"—and why not? . . . Dorothy Mackaill has turned up again, after a London visit, and has she got a sable cape? One of the prettiest of the winter—and I have an eye for sables. Of course, that's all I have got for sables, but then!

• • • •

Vincente Minnelli designed a moire dressing gown for the dancer, Paul Haakon, to wear in the "Casanova" scene in "The Show Is On," current musical hit at the Winter Garden. So many envious ladies gasped loudly and demanded copies that a feminine version has been made! It's really a gown and pajamas combined, and comes in ink blue and crimson, beige and black and ivory and violet. And it is beautiful!

Gray Lace With Purple Violets

Preview Features Deep Cuffs and Large Collars.

By Ethel Ehlen,

The Post Fashion Editor.

NEW YORK, Feb. 9.—According to previews in the fashion world, feminine necklines accented by frilly touches are new notes for the spring costume. You can get a head start on the season by adopting this trend now, by way of lace neckwear for your dark winter frock. There are collars to complement every type of frock neckline and facial contour. Or, you might vary the general feeling of your costume by several changes of neckline, via lingerie collar.

Some of these lovely accessories come in collar and cuff sets; others leave the burden of the frock transformation to the collar alone. Fine laces in white, eggshell and pale pink seem to be fashion's favorite colors, and all add feminine touches to the black or other dark silk or sheer woolen frocks. The majority are styled with the new high-low neckline, others exploit the new deep V trend. Ruffly jabots, a high-fashion trend in spring frocks, are also appearing in numerous numbers in lingerie neckwear.

Bows, too, are noted on many of the new collars, also fine pleated ruffles and inserts of hand embroidery. All-lace or the merging of lace and organdy or batiste are equally chic. Various kinds of lace are called into service to feminize the simple tailored frock, such as Irish and Cluny in the heavier types and fine Val edgings in the delicate materials. Mousseline with lace borders is another important note in the realm of spring neckwear.

The ever-popular idea of the basic frock with accessory changes to give the illusion of an extensive wardrobe is again to the fore. One good-looking frock with smart lines can serve for virtually all occasions. Accented by jewelry it can be worn either to business or for afternoon; with a lace collar, it is typically afternoon or appropriate for informal dinner; and with a tailored collar and cuff set of white or tinted pique, it assumes the appearance of the practical business or shopping frock.

Other trends in neckwear noted in the market are frilly jabot-like affairs fashioned of deep-toned organdy, with purple, red and blue, leading in the color choice. Handfagotting is appearing on both tailored and lace-trimmed collar and cuff sets—these are usually styled in all-white versions. With the unprecedented poularity of the suit, frilly gilets, lace-trimmed, are much in evidence as a swank mid-season accessory; white is the chosen color in this classification.

Enormous Collars.

Deviating from the small collars which marked the lingerie touches for fall and winter, the spring affairs are quite large, usually covering (or seeming to do so), almost the entire bodice. The newest cuffs too, are unusually deep, the goal being to completely transform the winter frock, and attract attention to the accents rather than to the costume.

With harmony throughout the wardrobe being emphasized this season more strongly than ever before, the new neckwear is fashioned to complement the latest ultra-feminine coiffures and hats. With the mode going feminine to the nth degree, lingerie touches and lace trimmings strike an important note in the mid-season wardrobe. Paradoxically as it may seem, the new collars, while feminine and frilly, are really simple in styling. This should be good news to the feminine world, as such fashioning lends itself well to easy laundering. Another interesting feature, lace is ageless and adapts itself to women of all ages; the becoming collar depending upon the styling.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

Failing Vision in Elderly Persons.

The eyes, like every other tissue of the body, are affected by the changes which come with advancing years. Certain of these alterations are especially significant because the loss of vision for which they are responsible may affect in a very positive way the activities of the patient.

One form of ageing which may be considered physiological is "old sight" or prebyopia. In this condition the muscle inside the eye which adapts it for near vision becomes gradually weaker. The crystalline lens, which is also a prime factor in close vision, becomes harder as the years increase. These manifestations usually appear between the ages of 42 and 45, and as a result the individual has difficulty in seeing clearly objects which are close to the eyes. We may have observed people hold a book or newspaper at arm's length in order to read ordinary print. Some will continue this maneuver without glasses, complaining that their principal handicap lies in the fact that their arms are not long enough.

Proper glasses will take the place of the weakened function of accommodation for near sight. In eyes which are otherwise normal, the choice of lenses for this purpose is a relatively simple matter. But many eyes have other refractive errors which become noticeable about this period, so that the selection of spectacles for old people demands great care. There are also a number of diseases not causing obvious symptoms which are detected only when the patient is examined. Hence the importance of a careful study of the eyes of all those who need glasses for reading.

Frequent With Age.

Cataract—a clouding of the crystalline lens—is frequent in old age. It is evident in some form in practically all those who reach the age of 85. In some it is found as early as 40 to 45. The pre-dominant symptom, in fact the only sign, is a gradual failure of vision for both far and near sight. Since it brings about disturbances in the optical properties of the eyes, vision may be improved for a time with glasses, but in the end the whole lens acts as a dark curtain preventing light from reaching the retina.

Whenever it is impossible for the patient to carry on his customary occupation with the best available aids, one or both cataracts may be removed. This involves an operation which requires skill and a number of precautions, but which is routinely successful in restoring useful, and in many instances, normal vision. Sight is regained, however, through the employment of a glass which replaces the natural lens.

Diabetes frequently develops in elderly persons in a rather mild form and may not be accompanied by symptoms which are recognized. Should the sugar level in the blood remain high for some time, the blood vessels inside the eyes are affected. The detection of such defects may bring about not only relief of the eye condition, but suggest treatment which will prolong the patient's active life.

Snack Between Meals Builds That Vitality

Combination of Milk and Cake Is Viewed as Splendid Pick-up.

By Carolyn Abbott.

THESE DAYS, it is more important to have vitality than the ever desired beauty. It is more complimentary to have someone say of you, "She is a vital woman," than "She is beautiful." A vital woman does not need regular features. It does not matter if she is short or tall, blonde or brunette. There is a "glow" to her personality because her entire self carries vital sparks that create it.

You wonder how this "glow" is acquired. According to physiologists, vitality is a matter of food habits. Most vital women are seldom overweight. This is probably due to the fact that most of the vitality building foods are not the most fattening.

You cannot have the desired vim and vitality if you let yourself get worn out and tired. The best way to prevent this is to give yourself a "snapper-upper" once in a while. Don't keep on working when you are tired, but stop for a few minutes and take some refreshing nourishment. Also wash your face and hands in the middle of the morning and afternoon. You will feel more alive after it.

Dr. H. W. Haggard, Yale University physiologist, said that the between-meal snack is a good fuel for building health, in place of sticking to the regular three meals a day. This may be especially interesting to business women who feel that "sinking" feeling in the middle of the afternoon.

This ties up with the fact that Dr. E. V. McCollum, head of the school of public health of Johns Hopkins University, finds that milk is the most potent builder of vitality of all foods. And, whether you are trying to increase or decrease weight, the most important foods for this purpose are milk, fruit, eggs and green leaf vegetables.

Hankies Exaggerated.

The 1937 version is so generously cut it trails on the floor when arms are held straight down. Mary Brian carries a wispy yellow chiffon almost a yard square, knotted once around her waist and then dropped to melt into the folds of a gray and chartreuse chiffon dress.

Mental Hospital Opened in Boston

Boston (U.P.).—A clinic for curing emotional ills has been opened at the Boston Dispensary.

All patients are treated in a group once a week by Dr. Joseph H. Pratt, professor of clinical medicine at Tufts College, and assisting doctors and social workers.

Dr. Pratt gives his "Thought Control Class" mental treatment—that is, suggestion and re-education—as a remedy to dispel pains and ills caused by wrong thinking.

The happier emotions, like joy, help to produce a healthier state, while fear, anger and sorrow make for poor health, Dr. Pratt says.

Habit formation is the basis of character, the physician says. Bad habits in the emotional domain cause common disorders of personality known as hysteria and neurasthenia.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Lonely Girl Joins Church and Promptly Fancies Herself in Love With Pastor; Asks How to Meet Him.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 21 years old and I came to Washington last September to take a job doing housework. I have gone quite a few places since coming here and have met many boys, but just don't seem to enjoy their company as they are not my type. I had been going out with them on my afternoons off, but found myself so bored with them that I got so I dreaded for the day to come. To mend matters I decided to join a church group here, which I did. Most of the pleasure I have ever had has come through church associations, and my parents are very religious.

• • • •

The first time I attended services at the church I found myself very much attracted by the pastor. From the moment I saw him I felt he was the only man I could ever love. He is very nice looking and very intelligent, and I really admire intelligent persons. But I don't seem to be able to attract his attention. I am fairly good looking, have no bad habits, have always lived a quiet life (which is the kind I enjoy most) and have never had any trouble attracting boy friends, but I can never get interested in the type of boys I attract.

• • • •

You may think I am silly, but it's true that I really love this minister. The more I see him the more I love him. Every Sunday I sit in the congregation during service just wondering how I can meet him and attract his attention. He's about ten years older than I, but I have always seemed older than my years. You may suggest that I join one of the church societies and do church work, but this is impossible as I couldn't afford the dues. The pastor heads one of the clubs, but the only thing I might join is the choir.

• • • •

I would be the happiest girl in the world if I could become his friend for he's the only man I've ever loved. Please tell me how to attract his attention and win his friendship. And tell me what you think about this feeling I have for him. I hope you understand. I will be looking for a speedy answer.

Sincerely yours, E. B. J.

Romantic Nonsense.

DEAR E. B. J. You probably won't believe me, but I must assure you that you are not really in love with the minister. You have a crush on him, which is a very different thing and quite understandable, considering the fact that you yearn for a different type of masculine association than your limited social opportunities have permitted you to find. He is probably the only man who has ever crossed your path who resembles in some degree your mental image of a fairy prince, and with whom it seems barely possible to strike up an acquaintanceship. You are letting your imagination run away with you in supposing there could ever be an exchange of love, or even of particularly close friendship.

• • • •

You haven't said whether the minister is married or single. Perhaps you don't know. And it would be well to find out before carrying your fantastic day dreaming any further. If he is married you probably stand a better chance of entering into a kindly, helpful friendship with him than you will if he is unmarried. Pastors regard it as part of their work to help groping, lonely, romantic-minded youngsters such as you to make a better social adjustment, and with the co-operation of a wise and understanding wife, may achieve fine results along that line. Pastors' wives, as a rule, are neither surprised nor greatly disturbed to learn that certain impressionable-minded female members of the congregation entertain crushes, of short or long duration, on their husbands, particularly if the latter are youngish and handsome and the female deprived of normal social opportunities.

• • • •

But it should be obvious that an unmarried pastor would need to go to greater lengths to protect himself from possible misunderstanding on the part of the girl he might wish to help, than would a married pastor whose wife provides him a certain social protection. Therefore, if the pastor is unmarried, I don't believe you can ever have any social contact with him other than occasional and accidental meetings in the church.

• • • •

Get this romantic nonsense about the pastor out of your head, once and for all. Then ask to speak with him some Sunday after services, or make an appointment to see him at the rectory on your afternoon off. Such an appointment could be made by telephone, with the explanation that you are a fairly new member of his congregation and have a problem on which you would like his advice. If he grants the interview, tell him honestly that you are desperately lonely for better social contacts than you have been able to make; that you cannot afford to pay church society dues; and that you would like some help and suggestions in making friends with the young people of his congregation.

• • • •

I am sure he will treat your problem sympathetically and wisely, and thereafter may take a kindly, although strictly impersonal interest in your welfare. At least he will recognize you when he sees you, and after a few conversations with him you may realize how foolish and unfounded was your hope of winning his love. And in the meantime, you may be developing other friendships which will help you to forget all about this adolescent infatuation.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Cake Recipe Winner In Valentine Contest

Miss Wilhelmina Kennon Receives First Prize; Unique Party Desserts Are Evidence Art Has Not Been Lost.

By Rebekah Blake.

THE POST READERS replied wholeheartedly to the contest for Valentine dessert recipes, and there were very few duplicates. It is hard to believe that there could be so many symbols for St. Valentine's Day for a single course of a meal or for party refreshments. No, the art of making party desserts has not been lost. And it certainly is one that deserves credit.

Wilhelmina S. Kennon was awarded first prize, $3, for her recipe for cake for St. Valentine's Day. Miss Kennon lives at 3120 Thirty-eighth street northwest.

The second prize, $2, was awarded Mrs. M. A. Rice, of Tilden Hall Apartments, for her recipe for Valentine Chiffon Trifle. Mrs. George S. Albertsen, of Annapolis, Md., won the third prize, $1, for her recipe for Angel Food Pie, and Mrs. Stuart Bennett, 808 North Bentalou street, Baltimore, won fourth prize, also $1, for her recipe for Quick Sponge Strawberry Roll. The fifth prize, $1, was awarded Mrs. Louis Harris, 216 Spruce avenue, Takoma Park, Md., for her recipe for a Harlequin Heart.

Here is Miss Kennon's recipe:

Cake for St. Valentine's Day.

Beat 1 cup butter to a cream, add grated rind of one lemon, very gradually beat in 2 cups sugar, then add alternately ½ cup milk, 3½ cups flour sifted with 4 teaspoons baking powder, fold in the whites of 7 eggs, beaten dry. Bake in an angel cake tin at 350 F. for 1 hour. When cold fill almost to the top with soft paper napkins, the opening make by the tube. Frost with white icing. Cover the top of the opening with a round lace doily, fill the doily with candied violets.

While the icing is still soft, arrange pink candy hearts around the top edge of the cake and green candy hearts around the base.

Mrs. Rice's recipe:

Valentine Chiffon Trifle.

1 large heart-shaped sponge cake
1 tablespoon gelatin
¼ cup cold water
4 egg yolks, beaten
¼ cup sugar
Juice of 2 oranges and grated rind of 1 orange
4 egg whites, stiffly beaten
¼ teaspoon salt
Pink frosting
Almonds

While baking the sponge cake, make the following: Soften gelatin in cold water. Beat yolks with sugar until light and thick, add orange juice and rind.

Cook in double boiler, stirring until thick. Add gelatine and stir until thoroughly dissolved. Chill. When partly congealed, heat until rather foamy. To the egg whites add salt and fold them into the gelatin mixture.

Cut a slice a little more than an inch thick from entire top of the cake. Hollow out inside and fill with the gelatin mixture, then put the slice back in place. Frost the cake with pink icing and garnish with almonds.

Mrs. Albertsen's recipe:

Angel Food Pie.

4 egg whites
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla

Beat the egg whites, until almost stiff, then gradually add the sugar and vanilla and continue beating until smooth and fine-grained. Place in a previously baked pastry shell and bake in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) about 30 to 40 minutes or until slightly browned. Remove from the oven, cool, and spread with 1 cup heavy cream, whipped, to which have been added one-quarter cup sugar and one-half teaspoon vanilla. Top with sugared raspberries or strawberries.

Mrs. Bennett's recipe:

Quick Sponge Strawberry Roll.

2 cups sugared strawberries
3 eggs
1 cup granulated sugar
1/3 cup water
½ teaspoon lemon extract
1 cup all-purpose flour
1½ teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt.

Beat the eggs until light; add the sugar gradually, and beat until fluffy. Add the water and the lemon extract. Sift together three times, the flour, baking powder and salt; combine with the first mixture. Pour into a shallow jelly roll pan lined with two thicknesses of waxed paper. Bake 25 minutes in a moderate oven (350 defrees F.). While still warm, turn on a large sheet of paper that has been sprinkled lightly with confectioners sugar. Spread with the chopped, sweetened strawberries. Roll up in the paper, place in refrigerator to chill. Serve cut in thick slices, with a garnish of whipped cream, if desired.

Mrs. Harris' recipe follows:

Dissolve in each of three bowls 2 tablespoons of granulated gelatin in 3 tablespoons cold water, then over hot. To No. 3 add one-half cup white wine, one-half cup orange juice, diced pulp of 1 orange, 2 teaspoons lemon juice and 3 tablespoons sugar. To No. 2 add three-quarters cup white or green grapes, halved and seeded, one-quarter cup water, 4 tablespoons lemon juice, 5 tablespoons sugar and a very little green coloring. To No. 1, add three-quarters cup sliced strawberries that have lain for 1 hour in 4 tablespoons sugar, one-quarter cup water and 1 teaspoon lemon juice and a little red coloring.

Pour No. 1 into a heart-shaped mould; when set sprinkle one-quarter cup finely chopped English walnuts over it.

Pour on No. 2; when set, spread over one-quarter cup walnut meats as before.

Pour on No. 3. Freeze. Unmold, pipe a whipped cream border on top, a bow and arrow in the center and serve with a separate bowl of whipped cream.

Cheese Biscuit Mix Described in Recipe

A cheese biscuit mix that you can make yourself:

Sift together 2 cups of general purpose flour, 2 teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt and ¾ teaspoon paprika. Cut in ¼ cup shortening. Then add ½ cup grated cheese. Then store in a modern refrigerator until such time as you wish to have "in-a-jiffy" hot biscuits. The moist, clean-washed air of the modern refrigerator will protect the mix against rapid drying out and against absorbing the odors of other foods. When ready to bake the biscuits, remove the mix from the refrigerator. Then add 2-3 cup milk and 2 teaspoons prepared mustard. Mix together and blend lightly with a fork. Pat or roll out on a floured board and cut in small biscuits. Place on greased baking sheet and bake in hot oven (450 degrees) for 12 to 15 minutes.

Macaroni Recipes Selected as Topic For Post Contest

The observers of the Lenten season find macaroni practically indispensable when preparing menus that are not monotonous. As little meat is eaten during this season, meat substitutes are sought and macaroni comes to the rescue of the housewife in more ways than one.

Macaroni is a versatile food. Of course it may be combined with meat in some favorite concoction, but it is so often used to replace meat. You may choose to prepare macaroni with cheese or peppers, bake macaroni with peanut butter or cream it. Or you may select it as a stuffing for tomatoes or peppers or include it in soup. There are numerous other methods of preparing this starchy food.

If you have a favorite recipe for macaroni, type or write it neatly and send it to Rebekah Blake, the Post Food Editor, so she will receive it not later than Saturday noon.

The cash prizes for this contest are $3 for first prize, $2 for second prize and $1 for each of the remaining three prizes.

Be sure to copy your name and address clearly on your recipe. Only one recipe will be accepted from each contestant.

Cherry Chiffon Pie.

Here's a grand recipe for cherry chiffon pie. Heat 1 cup of cherry juice to boiling point; add half-package of cherry-flavored gelatine and stir until dissolved; remove from fire and chill in modern refrigerator. When gelatin is partially congealed add half-cup of chopped cherries, mix as quickly as possible and return to the refrigerator Beat two eggg whites until frothy. Add ¼ cup of sugar gradually and continue beating until a stiff meringue is formed. Fold meringue into cherry mixture and pour into a baked pastry shell. Chill four hours in refrigerator. Makes one 9-inch pie.

Lincoln's Diet As Boy Reveals Gains of 1937

Meat Almost Only Food of Pioneer Family in Wilds of Indiana in 1816.

THE APPROACHING BIRTHDAY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN emphasizes the great change that has taken place in the diets of children of today and the diet of the boy, Lincoln. Today mothers make sure that their offspring get just the proper amount of spinach, milk and cod liver oil, but Lincoln got his start mostly on meat. Like many other frontier families, the Lincoln family ate what food they could find.

When the Lincolns moved to the half-open cabin in the wilderness of Indiana from Kentucky, in 1816, no other food but game was possible during the first winter, according to Albert J. Beveridge, one of the most exhaustive of the Lincoln biographers. By the second winter their cabin had four walls, though apparently no windows, and at some seasons nuts and wild fruit and wild honey were added to their diet. Meat was still the most prominent food. It was eaten as meat, water and bread, declared Dennis Hanks, Lincoln's older cousin and playmate.

Lincoln shot a turkey with his father's rifle soon after he moved to Indiana. He was 7 years old. Before that, the boy had shot fish in puddles and holes and chopped rabbits out of hollow trees after his dog had chased them there; but as he grew older, he let his father do most of the hunting and fishing while he worked on the farm or was hired out to other farmers.

Soon they were able to raise a little corn, which they made into hominy or ground with a stone or an axe-head in a hollowed-out stump, or carried it 17 miles to the mill.

Some years later the settlers were able to keep chickens and have "salt pork an' corn dodgers an' gyardin sass an' molasses an' have jeans pants an' cowhide boots to wear." Then they felt they were getting along in the world.

The boy, Lincoln, not only lived largely on game for a number of years, but wore a coonskin cap and often deerskin clothes and when he went to school for awhile one winter it was to a log schoolhouse and to a teacher who apparently took his pay in skins and hams and other farm produce—perhaps including live hogs.

Windsor Loves Apple Strudle; Easy to Make

Post Expert Offers Recipe for This Tasty Pastry.

THE DUKE OF WINDSOR ate so much apple strudel one afternoon lately that he had no appetite for dinner. And it is no wonder that he liked this famous pastry. It is the traditional Austrian type of fruit-filled swirl.

The duke went skiing with two friends. For tea, the three stopped in an inn where the keeper's wife offered them the pastry "made with my own hands and straight from the oven."

In Austria, where the former king now is living, it takes up the best part of an afternoon to make an apple strudel. It is composed of sliced apples, seasoned and rolled in dough. After the dough has been mixed and kneaded and given a few preliminary stretches, it is set in a warm place and left to rise for one-half hour. The cook then lays it on a white linen tablecloth, first sprinkling the cloth with flour. With the hands under it, the dough is pulled and stretched into a rope that is like a garland around the edge of a table. The thinner the rope the better the result will be. It may be as thin as paper. When the dough cannot be stretched any more, it is sprinkled with raisins, currants, chopped apples, almonds, cinnamon and sugar, all along the length. Then melted butter is generously dripped on the fruit.

The tablecloth held high helps with the gentle task of coiling. The hands are kept busy pinching and guiding the dough and keeping the fruit inside. Then the strudel is baked in the oven, sprinkled with melted butter and served hot at tea time.

Here is a recipe for American made apple strudel.

Apple Strudel.

Sift together 1 cup flour, 2½ teaspoons baking powder, 1½ tablespoons sugar and ½ teaspoon salt. Work in 3 tablespoons shortening with pastry mixer. Beat egg slightly and add 3 tablespoons milk and add enough of this mixture to dry ingredients to make a stiff dough. Roll about ¼ inch thick and brush with 2 tablespoons soft butter. Cover with 3 cups apples pared, cored, cut in pieces and mixed with 1-3 cup sugar, 1-3 teaspoon cinnamon and ¼ teaspoon nutmeg. Roll like a jelly roll, put in baking dish, brush with egg and milk and bake at 400 degrees F. for 45 minutes or until apples are cooked. Serve with whipped cream.

New York Apple Strudel.

Add 1 tablespoon of sugar to 1¼ cups of sifted flour and ½ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon baking powder and sift again. Rub in 4 tablespoons of soft butter. In another bowl beat an egg, add 3 tablespoons of lukewarm water and stir into the flour. Turn onto a floured board and knead until smooth. Place in a bowl, cover with a cloth and leave in a warm spot for ten minutes.

Roll on a floured board until oblong and thin as paper. Sprinkle with half a cup of fine, dry bread crumbs. Dot with 3 tablespoons of butter and sprinkle with fruit—3 tart apples, chopped fine, ½ cup raisins, ½ cup currants and ½ cup sugar. Roll tightly, fold in the ends, sprinkle all over with melted butter and brown sugar, transfer to a pan and bake about an hour in a moderate oven. When nearly done brush with butter and sprinkle with sugar. Cut in slanting slices.

Anxiety Passes As Water Falls On Mississippi

Dying Winds, Bright Weather Also Cheer Workers on Levees.

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 9.—Dying winds, bright weather and falling water relieved anxiety of Mississippi Valley dwellers above Memphis today and cheered downriver levee workers preparing for approaching flood crests.

The peak of the torrent apparently was passing here. For ten hours the level of the river remained nearly constant after climbing to record heights.

But Army engineers warned: "The crest of the flood is very flat and the stage of the river will remain near crest proportions for several days."

Battle Appears Won.

A 24-hour battle with winds that drove white-caps against the already taxed levees appeared won.

"Weather conditions over the Memphis district are more favorable today," Lieut. Col. Eugene Reybold, chief of engineers in this district, reported. "The wind has died down and with a drop in wind velocity there has come a calmer river surface and a lessening of wave wash.

"Prompt preventive measures have averted any adverse effect to the levees from the wave action of the past few days. Seepage and sand boils continue, as may be expected with water at high stages against the levees for long periods. However, prompt action has been taken in each instance and all affected points are under control.

No "Critical Points."

"There are no critical points in the levees in this district at this time."

Downstream, Helena, Ark., and Vicksburg, Miss., braced for the crest of the flood. Mississippi backwater, pushing up the mouth of the Yazoo River, inundated a large lowland area there and sent refugees into Vicksburg.

At Cairo, where the Mississippi and Ohio meet, women and children began to reappear, despite the injunction of Mayor August Bode forbidding their return until all flood danger is past.

New Deal's Agencies To Provide Convenience

By the Associated Press.

Representative Rayburn, of Texas, the House Democratic leader, said last night that President Roosevelt's proposal for reorganizing the Government's executive machinery was designed to "substitute convenience for confusion."

In a radio address, Rayburn said that after the reorganization the public would be able to make fuller use of the increased service the Government has provided in recent years.

Funds Asked for Naval Air Station at Norfolk

By the Associated Press.

Representative Norman Hamilton, of Portsmouth, Va., asked the House appropriations sub-committee drafting the naval appropriation bill yesterday to provide funds for replacements and additions to the overhaul plant and completion of the sea wall at the Naval Air Station in Norfolk.

Hamilton asked that $500,000 be provided for improvements to the overhaul plant and $300,000 to complete the sea wall.

Staunton Radio Station Plea Set for Hearing

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Communications Commission yesterday set for hearing of the application of the Staunton Broadcasting Co., Inc., of Staunton, Va., for a new station.

The application as originally filed was withdrawn and amended to request a construction permit for a station operating on 1,500 kilocycles, 250 watts, daytime only.

$12,722 Given To Flood Fund By Venezuela

Foreign Donation Helps to Bring Red Cross Total to $18,778,000.

A donation of $12,722.65, from Venezuela, was made yesterday to the American Red Cross. The gift brings the total raised for flood sufferers to $18,778,000.

The gift, in the form of a check, was presented to Admiral Cary T. Grayson, by Diogenes Escalante, Minister of Venezuela, who said:

"I have been requested by the Venezuelan Red Cross to convey to you as head of the American Red Cross the expression of its deepest sympathy for the recent calamitous disasters that have befallen dwellers of the Ohio and Mississippi valleys."

Nonchalantly strolling into Red Cross headquarters last night a well-dressed man took off his gloves, put them in his overcoat pocket and handed the coat to the astonished night watchman saying: "Send this to a flood victim."

Turning he walked out, coatless, into the rainy night.

Almost every part of the world has sent some donation to aid in relief for flood sufferers. Yesterday a check for $1,000 was received from a Hawaiian newspaper. A man whose identity was not learned sent in a diamond valued at $700.

An art exhibit to be held tomorrow at Garfinckel's department store will be visited by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt to aid flood refugees.

President's Taste in Drapes Undergoes Slight Revamping

He Selects Red Hangings for East Room of White House, but Accepts Fine Arts Commission's Preference as to Shade.

Although President Franklin D. Roosevelt's taste in clothes has brought him No. 1 placing on a recent list of "Twentieth Century Beau Brummels" his taste in drapes is, well, not so good.

At least the United Press reported that the Fine Arts Commission, which has the final word on White House furbishment purchases, didn't go all the way with the President on his choice of hangings for the East Room.

While the commission approved his idea for red drapes and passed the design it took a stand for a different shade of red. To this both the President and Mrs. Roosevelt readily assented, it was said.

The drapes, to cost $4,000, replace the 30-year-old gold colored ones which go into the discard along with the famous gold piano given to the White House during the Theodore Roosevelt Administration.

It is understood that the drapes will be matched with a red rug, and women of fashion say they have a tough time choosing evening gowns for White House affairs as the red motif is a more difficult background than the gold.

Mrs. Roosevelt, at her press conference, implied that both she and the President were pleased by his sartorial nomination. She added that her husband gave very little time to selection of his clothes.

Potomac Bridge Asked.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Stephen W. Gambrill, of Laurel, Md., asked Congress yesterday to authorize the George Washington Memorial Bridge Corporation to construct a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Dahlgren, Va., to a point south of Pope's Creek, in Charles County, Md. The corporation would be authorized to collect tolls on the bridge.

Radio Orders Effective.

By the Associated Press.

The Communications Commission said yesterday under orders previously entered a realignment of radio broadcasting facilities in the Richmond-Petersburg area became effective yesterday.

Search Started For Two Skiers Lost in Rockies

Three Miners, Missing Over Week-End, Are Found Safe.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, Feb. 9.—Ski-shod searching parties tracked the storm-swept Rockies today seeking two men missing since week-end blizzards sent snowslides hurtling down the icy mountain slopes.

Above timberline on 11,315-foot Berthoud Pass, rescuers pushed through heavy snow—30 feet deep in places—where Joseph Oppenheimer, 36, automobile appliance company official, and John S. Oberdorfer, 22-year-old bookkeeper, were last seen Sunday as they shot down the mountainside while skiing.

Just below timberline, on 10,240-foot Georgia Pass, Horace M. Little, 52, Denver mining promoter; Carl Brown, Denver miner, and an unidentified Alma, Colo., miner, who dropped from sight late, after they left their automobile near Jefferson, Colo., Saturday en route to inspect a mine, were found safe in a tiny mountain cabin.

Mrs. Little, the mining promoter's wife, said here someone telephoned her the three men "were alive, safe and well, but a little short of tobacco."

"They were in a cabin about 3 miles from the mine," Mrs. Little said. "I understood they found refuge in an unoccupied cabin where there was plenty of food."

An airplane, piloted by Col. Carlos L. Reeavis, circled over Berthoud Pass today to guide the ground searchers. Fear was expressed Oppenheimer and Oberdorfer may have been caught under a snowslide.

"Three big snowslides tore down the western side of the mountain after they headed that way," said Theodore A. Grossman, a friend.

Unofficial temperatures of between 20 and 30 degrees below zero were reported in the Jefferson region today. It was 3 below at Berthoud Pass and a chill wind whipped the snow.

Concerning Employes

The Government employe, whose name is legion here, is scrutinized by Luther C. Steward, president of the N. F. F. E., in a recent publication, and some of his conclusions will interest you—provided you are interested in the direction toward which the Government employe is drifting.

In early days, he points out, Government clerks actually were Government clerks. The public employe was essentially a clerical employe, and he had little room for initiative, "little pressure for advancement." Today the situation is altered, but, says Mr. Steward, "because public pressure for an improved public service has been so generally lacking, the status of the public employe in this country is far from an enviable one.

"In most States and in most municipalities the average public employe is chosen without regard to Civil Service qualifications. In the Federal Government, the tendency toward this condition has increased scandalously in recent years," he believes.

Expressing no desire to emphasize or overemphasize "the somber hue of the conditions" surrounding the public employe, Steward indicates that some progress has been made. "A beginning has been gained in the initiation of the merit system. Classification systems are in effect in certain quarters, although the Federal Government still confines the scope of the classification act of 1923 to the District of Columbia." He points to the retirement plans.

But despite these gains, Steward thinks the public employe "far from secure in a professional status. Because of the strength of the spoilsmen and the inadequate bulwarking of the merit system, either by legislation or by the force of public opinion, he can never be certain of tenure."

In numerous instances, trained emfployes under an apparently safeguarded Civil Service system have been displaced to make room for patronage appointees, he complains, adding that it is difficult to get a professional Civil Service personnel and esprit de corps under such conditions.

The public employe, he says, has made a laudable effort to modernize the machinery of recruitment to meet increasing demands. And "it is noteworthy that virtually all improvements brought about in working conditions in the public service have been accomplished by employe groups. The service has been improved by pressure from within, rather than by pressure from without. Indeed, the outside pressure oftentimes has been in direct opposition to the initiation of vitally needed changes in methods," he says.

The aims of the public employe in seeking improved working conditions and sounder personnel administration are identical with the public demand for better service from the Government, he says in closing the case.

Means to an End

There are strange vehicles for getting places in this world and one of these is described in the current issue of Extension Service Review, Department of Agriculture publication. It deals with a go-to-college poultry project which has been presented to 60 of the 67 counties in Alabama in recent months. Ten to 30 boys and girls in each county will start this fall to develop a go-to-college flock. It is estimated that 300 hens properly taken care of will pay the necessary expenses of a boy or girl while in college. One hundred hens with 160-egg production will produce approximately the same gross income as five bales of cotton.

"Better Understanding"

"Better understanding and good feeling" is expected to result from the meeting of the National Executive Council of the A. F. G. E. with Capitol Hill leaders, members of the Civil Service Commission and others interested in personnel welfare, here Saturday. This outlook is held by James G. Yaden, president, District of Columbia Department, A. F. G. E., which will act as host. William Green will have something to say. The social feature is a banquet, to be held at 7 p. m. in the gold room of Hamilton Hotel.

Steak and Architecture

There is a relationship between the cubic foot price of a masonry building and the price of a pound of sirloin steak and it baffles the editors of the Federal Architect. Inasmuch as the problem belongs to them, they should be permitted to state the case in their own way, which follows:

"There is a very curious economic relation of prices which is difficult for us to understand. Why is it that the cubic foot price of a masonry building is always the same as the price, per pound, of sirloin steak? There must be a hidden reason for it.

"When, during the low ebb of the depression, buildings were being built for 28 cents a cubic foot, you could go into any meat shop and there was the quotation, 'Sirloin steak, 28 cents a pound.'

"And now, when we are figuring structures at 51 cents, sirloin steak is 51 cents. We have placed our staff of expert economists upon this condition in an endeavor to discover the underlying reason for it."

These facts, the architects point out, are valuable to keep in mind. "When you are figuring the cost of a building and are in doubt as to the proper per-foot price to use, we suggest that you call the nearest butcher emporium, ascertain the sirloin steak price and use it for your building unit figure." We'll do this next time.

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1937

Well, I'll Tell You . . . . . By Bob Burns

I've got a kind of confession to make. Although I make my livin' talkin' and I suppose I talk a whole lot, I hate to talk. But the thing that wears me out is to have somebody talk to me. I hate to ask some people a simple question because that seems to be an invitation for them to open up and gab away for a half an hour and when they finish up, they haven't answered my question. That's one reason I like to go back home once in a while. If you ask them a question, you get just what you ask for and no more. I went back in the mountains, but I didn't know just where, but I happened to see a boy in front of the Post Office that came from that part of the country and he was talkin' to a fella, but when he finished, I called the boy over and I says, "Can you show me where Mr. Wade Allsop lives?" and the boy says, "Yep, follow me." So we started out that morning and we trudged for miles and miles over the mountains and finally along about sundown, we get to this little house 'way back there on the side of the hill and the boy says, "That's where he lives.' So I went up to the house and knocked and hollered but nobody answered and I came back to the boy and says, "I guess he ain't here" and the boy says, "No, he ain't." And I says, "Do you know where I can find him?" and the boy says, "Yes, he's in town. That was him I was talkin' to when you called me."

'Pink Rider,' Repeal Bills Await Action

Conference Seen Today or Tomorrow Barring Wheeler's Illness.

Senate Is Expected to Force Reconsideration by House.

Diametrically opposed bills affecting the "red rider" were awaiting further action in the Senate and House yesterday as the former body was in recess.

The Wheeler bill for outright repeal was before the House, despite the latter's adoption of the McCormack "pink rider," while the amended House bill was before the Senate.

The two bills are expected to go to conference today or tomorrow unless the illness of Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, delays action in the Senate.

The next move probably will occur in the Senate, where the House bill could be called up, the McCormack amendment stricken, and the Senate repeal provision substituted. The measure then would go to conference.

Second House Vote Seen.

Sponsors of the repeal move in both the House and the Senate confidently predicted that the House will be forced to vote again on the issue, probably when the House conferees report that the Senate will not accept the House amendment.

Meanwhile, Representative Kenney (Democrat), of New Jersey, introduced a resolution in the House to require all public school teachers to take an oath to support the Constitution before assuming a position.

While Washington teachers take such an oath, many teachers over the country do not, Kenney said.

The House amendment was denounced yesterday by the Board of Education as constituting little improvemet over the "red rider."

Henry I. Quinn, member of the board and president of the District Bar Associatoin, predicted that no teacher would run the risk of violating the law were the "pink rider" to become an act. The danger, he said, would be that children might gain the wrong impression of instruction about communism and cause trouble.

"Just Begun to Fight."

"In my opinion," he said, "a vast majority of the teachers will elect to say nothing whatever about Russia."

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the board, was not willing to give up hope that the "red rider" finally will be repealed.

"The battle is not over by any means," she said. "In fact, we have just begun to fight, and we shall fight until this unjust reflection on the patriotism of 3,000 American public school teachers is wiped out.

"As I sat in the House and listened to the proceedings, I had the impression that what was needed was moral courage. Members of Congress admitted that they did not believe in the sort of thing they were voting for, but were afraid of what their constituents might think."

Child's Dentistry Called Important

Taking as his topic "Dentistry for Children," Dr. Walter T. McFall, of Nashville, Tenn., addressed the District of Columbia Dental Society, in session at the United States Public Health Auditorium last night.

Dr. McFall stressed the importance of children's dentistry. Nationally known as a speaker, he has spent much time lecturing to dental societies in an effort to encourage and stimulate interest in post-graduate study and research in children's dentistry.

He is a former member of the faculty of the Atlanta-Southern Dental School, and past president of the American Society for the Promotion of Dentistry for Children.

'Egotism, Inferiority' of Man Blamed for Woman's Plight

Eudora Ramsay Richardson, Author, Challenges 'Weaker' Sex to Undo Male Mischief; Several Cures Suggested.

The first part of this story is for women only. It has to do with a woman speaker, talking to a roomful of feminine reporters about—of all things and all people—the foibles and frailties of men en masse, and the extent to which these qualities should be recognized and curbed by intelligent and well-meaning women.

Eudora Ramsay Richardson, of Richmond, is a widely recognized authority on this subject. A few months ago her book, "The Influence of Men—Incurable," was acclaimed by critics as a more than adequate answer to John Erskine's volatile volume, "The Influence of Women and Its Cure." In talking before the Women's National Press Club at luncheon yesterday, she elaborated on the faults of men and told what women could do about them.

"The egotism of man might be passed by, as women have ignored it through all the ages, if we were not being brought face to face with the reality that egotism plus a feeling of inferiority—yes the two go together in man's make-up—lie at the base of man's influence."

Her brown eyes twinkling, Mrs. Richardson pointed out that organized men on the march were largely responsible for fostering propaganda that the world once belonged to men and is now being purloined by women; that a woman must be kept in her place, and that the home is woman's only place; that woman's real duty in life is to serve as an inspiration to some man.

"The influence of men has always attempted to bring about discrimination against women," she continued. "And this has tended to exclude from gainful occupations first the married women and then all women. Such discrimination is based, of course, upon the fallacy that every woman can find a man who is ready and willing to support her."

Declaring that women were the producers and the conservers of humanity, Mrs. Richardson further averred that "the only two things which we can credit to men exclusively are the profit system and war. As soon as men found women could make, in their own homes, beautiful wearing apparel and delicious and dainty foods, they—the men, of course—began to figure out how these products could be made on a larger scale for profit. So the profit system started, and look where it landed us. I suppose anyone, even a man would agree that we would never have armed conflict if it were not for men."

While most of her remarks were directed against men, Mrs. Richardson also voiced a few hints for women to take to heart. "The woman who counts these days is a person who earns her own living and sees organization as channels through which something can be accomplished," she said. "There is no longer a place in the scheme of things for the woman who makes a profession of club work. I believe the women most worth while, the home-makers and the wage earners, can do much to correct the mischief men have started," she continued. "Such women will agree, I am sure, that the world should belong to neither man nor woman but that it should be a man-and-woman's world."

In closing, she emphasized that her quarrel was not with man as an individual ("I am really fond of a number of men—my husband, my father, my brothers," she said), but with men on the march, organized men, who are jealous of male prowess and eager to keep woman well in hand. "Those are the ones we must watch," she warned. "They will rob us of the few rights we have. They are trying even now, in this country and in Europe, to turn back the hands of time on woman's rights. Their influence is—incurable."

Woman's place in the current European picture was one of the few topics not touched on by the other guest speaker, Miss Anna Louise Strong, associate editor of the Moscow Daily News. Centering her remarks around the recent trial of the Trotzkyists, Miss Strong said they were given fair treatment before the court and were not subjected to any third degree.

Sad Farewell at Zoo Marks Animals' Departure for East

It was the day of parting at the Zoo and the sight was very sad, indeed.

The two Marks brothers snarled their best jaguar snarls; Mr. and Mrs. Bear (Fore and Over) gazed pleadingly into the eyes of Daddy Blackburne in hopes of a last-minute commutation, and the pair of pumas pumed until their crates shook.

Ten (10) alligators presumably wept real alligator tears, husband and wife raccoon consoled each other—both believed they were on the first lap of becoming collegiate fur coats—and the 'possum trio forgot to play 'possum and just whimpered.

The only ones who refused to get ruffled were the hellbender quintuplets. And, for all one knows, even they may have been raising plenty of protest yesterday as the animal consignment was being sent on the first leg of its 43-day trip to Sumatra. Unlike all their fellow travelers except the alligators, the hellbenders were completely enclosed in their shipping case so that one could only imagine how, or if, they were bearing up.

Sentimentalists may aver that the jaguer twins were morose, not so much because they were leaving forever their birthplace, but because they were not given a chance to bid Mamma Rose and Poppa Lopez good-bye.

To allay such feelings of misgiving, it should be said that had the 18-month-old twins been allowed in the same cage with their parents the youngsters probably would have torn their elders spot from spot. Or possibly vice versa. In either case, the result is not pleasant to contemplate.

The Marks brothers may be only a year and a half old, but they are practically full grown. And no sissies.

Roy H. Jennier who, with Malcolm Davis, will sail from Brooklyn tomorrow on the S. S. Talisse with the animals in custody, was asked for a farewell statement. Jennier is chief of the reptile house and an expert mammalogist. Davis is bird house chief and, like Jennier, a veteran collector.

Jennier's farewell statement, ere hopping the 2 o'clock electric express train to New York with his 2½ tons of wild critters (including crates), was short, sweet and to the point.

"I hope I don't get seasick," he said.

He spoke in a low tone so the animals would not hear, as the very suggestion would have nullified their appetite for the half ton of beef, 100 pounds of fish, barrels of apples and miscellaneous other constitutional fortification that is being taken along.

Jennier, Davis & Co. are headed for Belavan-Deli, Sumatra, to join the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Institution expedition, headed by Dr. William M. Mann, directotr of National Zoological Park.

The Marks brothers and their 24 traveling companions are going over as missionaries, as it were, Americans all (North or South), they will be swapped off to Asia or the East Indies or left behind to spread some good old New World good will.

Just what they will be swapped for it is too early to say. However, one animal lover who witnessed yesterday's takeoff declared, just before two gentlemen with "Guard" on their caps placed him in a padded wagon and drove off:

"They certainly should bring at least a pair of man-eating dactyls, a male plethora and a family of tycoons."

Mrs. Grant to Preside At Tuberculosis Parley

In recognition of her work here, Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, managing director of the District Tuberculosis Association, has been appointed to preside at the conference of Eastern States tuberculosis associations in New York tomorrow.

The object of the conference is to consider means of raising larger funds to carry on the fight against tuberculosis and to improve the annual sale of Christmas seals from which the associations get much of their revenue.

Pastel Tuxedos Appear Here When Proud Designers Parade

Dinner jackets in pastel shades and sport coats in primary colors made their appearance in Washington last night on the backs of their designers—the members of the Merchant Tailor Designers Association.

Creating with clothes an atmosphere of Southern beaches and tropical nights, the tailors, at a "June Night" party at the Hotel Washington, gave each other their ideas of what the well-dressed man will adopt for resort wear this summer.

All day long the dictators of male fashion had been at work in smoke-filled rooms—busy deciding on proper garments for the man on the street, on the golf course or at the beach club.

In a report to the group, composed of the Nation's leading tailor-designers, President I. H. Milbouer declared:

"It is not advisable to tell a man that h will simply require 40 suits to make him a gentleman. It is far better to enumerate the types of clothes he should have in his wardrobe."

Milbouer included in the gentleman's wardrobe such highly specialized garments as a director's suit, a traveling suit, a cravenette traveling overcoat and an informal (colored) cutaway.

Gayest perhaps of the tailor-mannequins at last night's affair was R. L. Hewitt, of Toronto, reputed to be one of the best designers in the Western Hemisphere. To the music of an Irish jig Hewitt danced onto the stage clad in a green dinner jacket with black trousers.

According to Harry A. Young, of Detroit, the "summer formals" in pastel shades are already accepted more than is realized by the general public.

About 225 tailor-designers attended the show last night. The association continues its fifty-seventh annual convention at the Hotel Washington today.

Labor Laws For Women Vary Widely

States' Wage and Hour Legislation Far From Uniform, Report Says.

Bulletin to Miss Perkins Reveals D. C. in Van on Minimum Week.

Lack of uniformity in laws affecting minimum wages and maximum hours for women workers is revealed in a report just submitted by the Women's Bureau to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

Prepared by Florence P. Smith of the bureau's research division, the bulletin deals with State labor laws affecting women throughout the country and points out that the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico belong with the small group of seven States having the 8-hour day combined with the 48-hour week in some industries or occupations, as the maximum hours allowed for women.

Oregon Has Shortest Week.

Oregon, with a 44-hour week for women in two industries, can point to the shortest week ever put into effect by a State regulation. At the opposite end of the scale are the 18 States in which women may work 10 hours or more daily in certain industries or occupations and the 16 States permitting weekly hours in excess of 54.

Some type of minimum-wage legislation is found in the statute books of 17 States. In all these States except South Dakota, where the wage is fixed in the law itself, provision is made for the establishment of wage boards composed of representatives of the workers, the employers and the public.

The laws are broad in their coverage of industries, and in States with laws of long standing, such as California, Massachusetts, North Dakota, Oregon, Washington and Wisconsin, wage rates have been established for women in most industries. Massachusetts made its law mandatory in 1934, and revised it again in 1936 in an effort to meet constitutional objections.

$16 Set by California.

California has generally established the rate of $16 for a 48-hour week for experienced industrial women. Illinois has set $16.50 for a 45-hour week for registered beauty culturists and manicurists, and 35 cents an hour for a 40-hour week for women in macaroni and spaghetti factories.

Other legislative efforts of States to safeguard women workers include laws in 16 States regulating industrial home work. Night work has been prohibited for women in certain industries or occupations in 16 States and Puerto Rico. All States except Mississippi have laws requiring seating accommodations for women workers. Only six States have legislation prohibiting the employment of women immediately before and after childbirth.

D.C. Man Seized On Mails Charge

Andrew V. Hepler, 58, of the 1400 block of K street northwest, was arrested late yesterday by United States Marshal Thomas Ott, on request of postal inspectors, on a charge of using the mails to defraud.

He was held in default of $5,000 bond. The complainant, William Dyer, of the 3100 block of Pershing drive, Arlington, Va., charged that he answered an advertisement for a salesman's helper that Hepler allegedly had inserted in a Washington newspaper.

A deposit of $300 bond was required for the job, he said, and after he made his deposit he went to work with Hepler specialties.

Becoming suspicious some time later, he sought to recover his bond and quit. He got only part of it back, he said. He complained to postal authorities, and at their request, Ott made the arrest.

Sparks Fly When Architects Discuss Capitol Alterations

Esthetic Values of Changing East Front Arrayed Against Historic Loss; Both Sides Strongly Supported to Senate Committee.

Like alienists whose wisdom and sincerity are unquestioned yet who take diametrically opposite positions on a case in point, experienced architects clashed fiercely yesterday over the Capitol's proposed face-lifting operation.

"The most important historical building in the country would be wiped out by the change," Dr. Leicester Holland Warned Chairman Tom Connally and his Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

"The Constitution has been adjusted to meet the Nation's growing needs," contributed Harry Francis Cunningham. "Why not the Capitol?"

"Expansion of the east front of the Capitol would mean that the work of Thornton, Latrobe and Bulfinch would be obliterated," countered E. W. Donn, jr.

"Expansion of the east front is desirable," said Nathan S. Wyeth.

"An historic spot would be eliminated, and besides, this is no time to spend $4,000,000 to push the Capitol out a few feet," pleaded T. S. Palmer.

"The present condition of the sandstone in the central portion of the Capitol is very bad and should be corrected," spoke up Egerton Swartwout in defense of Senator Connally's face-lifting—or pushing—bill.

"I am all in favor of the bill," bolstered H. P. Caemmerer.

All of these witnesses who testified yesterday at the resumption of public hearings on Connally's re-introduced measure, which passed the Senate in 1935, but died in a House committee room, are architects except Palmer and Caemerer. The former, a retired Agriculture Department official, appeared as a taxpayer, and the latter spoke as secretary of the Fine Arts Commission.

One more partisan remains to be heard when the third, and probably final, committee hearing opens at 10:30 a. m. tomorrow. He is Lorimer Rich, New York architect, who designed the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and the memorial approaches to Arlington Amphitheater. In 1935 he spoke against the bill to alter the appearance of the Capitol's east portico.

Dr. Holland, chairman of the American Institute of Architects committee on preservation of historic buildings and chief of the Library of Congress fine arts division, said the historic and esthetic loss resulting from alterations to the central, original portion of the Capitol would be far greater than any possible gain.

"The building's highest value rests in the fact that it is not finished and it never will be," he said, going on to trace the Capitol's structural development from the time George Washington laid the cornerstone until Civil War days when Thomas U. Walter, then Architect of the Capitol, recommended the change now being sought by Senator Connally.

The acknowledged fact that the skirt of the dome overhangs the portico which would be corrected by the bill was praised as a "distinctive feature" by Dr. Holland.

Cunningham, a practicing Washington architect, disputed Dr. Holland's assertion that the domes of St. Paul's in London and St. Peter's in Rome appear to "sit on the roof" whereas the Capitol dome, by virtue of the moot overhang, seems to rise gracefully from the ground.

Donn, 45 years an architect and a fellow of the A. I. A., said the proposed alterations would change appreciably the appearance of the east portico, scene of Presidential inaugurations. He warned that any tinkering with the existing structure might plunge some one into "hot water."

Wyeth, District municipal architect, pointed out that several changes and additions have been made to the original building.

When Palmer said taxpayers like himself, as well as legislators and architects, had a stake in the Capitol, Connally interrupted with:

"We members of Congress pay taxes, too."

D. C. Budget Hearing Opens In Cordial Air

Executive hearings on the 1938 District budget opened yesterday in a cordial atmosphere that contrasted sharply with that of recent years.

With Chairman Collins (Democrat), of Mississippi, in charge, the sub-committee heard the commissioners and then Auditor Daniel J. Donovan explain the serious fiscal condition of the District government and then discussed salary items of a half-dozen departments.

Hearings will resume this morning and will adjourn later in the day until Friday.

Donovan submitted a lengthy report showing how the budget submitted to Congress by the Budget Bureau, with but a $2,500,000 Federal payment, would leave the District nearly $10,000,000 in the red.

He told the sub-committee that, despite the local building boom, real estate tax revenue will be smaller this year than last.

Even with a return to the $5,000,000 Federal contribution, he said, District revenue would still be far under anticipated expenditures.

The sub-committee indicated that it will not try to balance the local budget but will expect the House District Committee to make up whatever deficit appears in prospect by submitting new tax legislation.

The only tax that the sub-committee on appropriations has any control over is the real estate tax, and Collins is opposed to any increase.

Meeting Place Changed.

Meeting place of Bethel No. 4, U. D. Job's Daughters of Washington, has been changed from the Ben Murch School to the Masonic Hall, over the Avalon Theater, it was announced yesterday. The first meeting will be held Friday at 7:30 p. m.

Citizens' Group Opposes D. C. Fiscal Report

A resolution opposing the Jacobs fiscal report was adopted last night by the Burleith Citizens Association, in session at Gordon Junior High School.

The organization also went on record as being opposed to the legalization of horse racing in the District.

E. D. Merrill, vice president of the Capital Transit Co., gave a talk on transportation problems in the District.

A request that the triangle at Naylor road, Twenty-third and Q streets, be purchased for the purpose of making a new public park was made by the Randle Highlands Citizens Association, in session at 2407 Minnesota avenue southeast. A copy of this request will be sent the Park and Planning Commission.

Opposition was expressed to legalized racing in the District by the group, which was presided over by A. W. Lee, its president.

R. H. Randle, chairman of the membership committee, reported there were 7 new members and 46 renewals.

U. D. C. Unit to Meet.

Henry W. Samson, a member of the flag committee of the National Society of Sons of the American Revolution, will be guest speaker at a meeting of Southern Cross Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, in the Willard Hotel tonight at 8. He will speak on "Desecrations and Misuse of the Flag of the United States."

Civil Service Seen Gaining In Efficiency

Patronage Era Passing, Says Leonard White, U. S. Official.

Organization Not Quite Centralized Enough, Diplomats Told.

The Civil Service of the United States has emerged from the era of patronage, Leonard White, United States Civil Service Commissioner, asserted in an address last night before members of the Diplomatic Corps and foreign colony in Hurst Hall of American University.

He spoke as the second lecturer in the series, "The Political Institutions of the United States," a lecture course which has been arranged by the university.

The administration and functions of the civil service in this country were described by Dr. White, who compared it with the various civil services of European nations.

He stated the American Civil Service had become "in most respects an effective instrument for the execution of a rapidly developing policy of social legislation."

Not Centralized Enough.

"The scope of its functions," declared he, "resembles that of the highly-developed European countries, but in its organization it is not so highly centralized as is usually the case on the European continent. In this respect the United States resembles the British Civil Service rather than the French, German or Italian."

The unit, or centralization, of the Americna civil service is broken by the independent State and municipal civil services from the continental point of view, said Dr. White.

"The United States," he stated, "has placed greater reliance on the civil service as a central office for recruiting and managing personnel matters than any other country in the world."

"Better Administration Needed.

The American civil service, in comparison with various European services, lacks a well defined administrative corps, Dr. White opined.

"The need for better administration," said he, "has long been apparent, and it is likely that a gradual development in this direction will take place.

"Many administrative officials have been drawn from the professional and scientific services, and many commentators believe that the professional and scientific background is essential for the administration of these services."

The third lecture in this series on the political institutions of the States will be given next Tuesday by Frederick M. Davenport, former member of Congress and now chairman of the National Institute of Public Affairs.

Silver, Jewelry Stolen From Northwest Home

Silverware and jewelry valued at between $2,000 and $3,000, were stolen from his home at 5120 Thirty-ninth street northwest, Edward E. Taylor reported to police yesterday.

Taylor said he returned home Monday from a vacation in Florida. His home was ransacked but only the jewelry and silver were taken. The burglars entered the house through a basement window.

Strip Artiste Is Governed by Her Horoscope

Stars Indicate 'Follies' Star Could Not Evade Career on Stage.

Even if Gypsy Rose Lee, foremost exponent of strip-tease dancing, and the girl who introduced garment wrecking into the "Ziegfeld Follies" wanted to quit the theater she couldn't, at least, not according to the signs of the Heavens.

Gypsy, christened Louise Ann Hovick, is born to the theater, her natal chart shows. Based on data furnished by Gypsy, the chart reveals she had the second degree of Sagittarius rising at the time of her birth.

This denotes she is strongly passionate and well-favored, but finds it difficult to subdue and control the forces by which she is swayed. Aggressive action is her motier. This may be seen in her rise, through will power, from burlesque to Broadway.

But believe it or not, Gypsy didn't have to be a strip artist. According to World Astrology Magazine, Gypsy might have been anything from a trapeze artist to a Shakespearean actress, but whatever her choice she would not have stuck to the routine or orthodox ways of doing things.

Is Serious Young Woman.

Further, Gypsy isn't light hearted as she'd have you believe. Back of her glamor is a woman with serious thoughts who realizes the importance of life's sternnesses. A good business woman. Gypsy is also affectionate, loving her family, as do most Capricorn individuals. A strong desire to create an estate, especially land, is hers.

Many opportunities for strengthening her financial security are discerned during 1937, providing Gypsy is careful not to develop any far-flung illusions concerning her popularity.

It will be necessary for her to keep her contracts and work on solid ground, voiding emotional sprees, the possibilities of which are shown in her planets.

Times for Caution.

Gypsy should be cautious in a physical way August 1 to 12 and again a few days around September 12. During these days she should avoid temper, hastiness, overwork and risks.

Following her "Follies" tour, Gypsy is scheduled to begin work at the Twentieth Century-Fox studio, where, it is reported, she will be made into another glamor girl of the comely curvc: type.

But can they type Gypsy? The stars say no! Gypsy is just herself and that's the way she'll remain.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress presents the Coolidge Quartet (William Kroll, Nikolai Berezovski, Nicolas Moldavan and Victor Gottlieb) in the chamber music auditorium Tuesday afternoon. Program: Quartet in F minor, Op. 95 (Ludwig van Beethoven), Quartet in B flat, Op. 14, No. 5 (Francois Joseph Gossec), Quartet No. 2 (Bohuslav Martinu).

Hardly had the echoes died away after the last of the eight concerts presented by the Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress, when the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation began yesterday afternoon a series of eight programs which will run well into March. This time, however, there is to be no succession of visiting foursomes, for the Coolidge Quartet will play the entire schedule.

William Kroll and his colleagues chose for the inauguration of the series three works utterly disparate in style and content. The F minor quartet of Beethoven, which hovers like a harbinger of his last magnificent compositions in that form, mingles reflections of the eighteenth century manner with premonitions of revolutionary change. Unsettled and transitional, it will not fit into any category, but leads an independent life in a restless activity that is a kind of happiness.

The B flat quartet by Francois Joseph Gossec is a quaint example of the naivete embedded in early quartet writing. Born in Belgium in 1734, Gossec while still a youth went to Paris and with the help of Rameau established himself there, playing no small part in French music until his death 108 years ago next Tuesday. His first symphonies appeared in 1754, five years before Haydn's, and his first quartets in 1759.

Containing only two movements, an andante and a contrasting allegro, this quartet represents the bicellular stage in the evolution of a form destined to complexity. The structure is strictly balanced, almost rigid in its antiphonal arrangement of themes, yet the music has a Gallic liveliness and wit.

Bohuslav Martinu's second quartet, now 12 years old, is continually interesting as a display of romanticism affecting a modern mind. For all its passing dissonances and preoccupation with counterpoint, it is akin to older works more obviously imaginative. There are suggestions of a ballade in the duo of violins, and of Zigeuner improvisation in the long passage for solo violin. Its essentially melodic quality is but thinly veiled by harmonic asperities.

William A. Albaugh presents Uday Shan-Kar and his Hindu Ballet in a dance program, with musical composition and direction by Vishnudas Shirali. At the National Theater, Tuesday afternoon.

Old India, its music and dance, came to life yesterday afternoon on the stage of the National Theater as Uday Shan-Kar and his Hindu Ballet presented a new cycle of dances, accompanied by a native orchestra, before a capacity audience.

"Shiva Parvati Nryttya Dwandva" was the major offering, depicting the quarrel between Shiva and his consort, Parvati, which was settled only by the gods deciding which one was best able to evoke the nine Rasas, the states of calm, wonder, terror, pathos, heroism, comedy, eroticism, fury and disgust produced in an audience by the dance.

Shan-Kar, as Shiva, and SimKie, as Parvati, were particularly effective, utilizing rhythm and movement in each Rasa to bring out the native significance of the several emotions.

Two solo numbers were offered by Shan-Kar, "Kartikeyya," an episode from the story of the handsome and heroic son of Shiva, and "Snake Charmer," the re-creating in dance of a familiar India street scene.

The first and third portions of the program were composed of shorter numbers of solo and ensemble dances. Particularly worthy of mention were Simkie's "Marwari," a typical folk dance; Madhaven's "Hunter's Tragedy" and "Mayoor Nrittya" (peacock dance), and the entire company's "Nirasha."

While it may fall to some extent upon Occidental ears as being somewhat unmusical, the pentatonic accompaniment on native instruments was not the least of the commendable aspects of the program. Unusual, indeed, the music ideally suited the modus operandi of the dancers. Besides a musical prologue, Vishnudas Shirali, who composed the music and directed the orchestra, offered a solo on the tabla taranga, demonstrating astounding digital dexterity; and Flutist Nagen Dey and Tabla Player Sisir Sovan offered a duet.

In the large view, the program was most unusual and excellently presenetd, sincerely and spontaneously acclaimed by the audience.

Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops

Some of the Theater's Young Luminaries Take the Air Over WOL and Prove Quick Thinkers and Glib

We Interview Alice White, Lucille Ball, Don Beddoe and Keenan Wynn, Son of the Famous Ed, All in "Hey Diddle Diddle," at the Belasco; Warners Have Big Ones in Production; Early Curtains for Night Performances of "Dead End."

THAT was a very pleasant 15 minutes on the air yesterday from 1:45 to 2 p. m. over Station WOL.

Without rehearsal, previous preparation or script, this column was privileged to interview Alice White, Lucille Ball, Keenan Wynn and Don Beddoe, of the "Hey Diddle Diddle" company, currently appearing at the Belasco as the first attraction under the reversion of the Lafayette Square playhouse to the policy of presenting living drama, and Carleton Miles, distinguished critic and playwright, now in Washington in the interest of the impending engagement of Taylor Holmes in "Tobacco Road," at the Belasco.

BELL.

Strangely enough, the whole merry business went off practically without a hitch, these brilliant young people of the theater being articulate, glib and quick on the verbal trigger.

It is interesting to note that Miss White and Miss Ball are making their first stage appearances in a dramatic play in "Hey Diddle Diddle." Miss White, to be sure, was here two or three years ago for a week of personal appearances at the Earle, but this is her first essay at a sustained characterization on the stage. She has had many, needless to say, on the screen. Miss Ball, too, has been in some dozen or 15 pictures, but never before on the stage of the legitimate theater.

Don Beddoe is a veteran of the playhouse whose roles have been many and varied. He is doing an excellent job in his present assignment at the Belasco, but likes to hark back to the fun he had playing an important character in "The Warrior's Husband."

Keenan Wynn comes naturally by his dramatic heritage. He probably could not keep out of the theater if he wanted to and tried his hardest. He is the son of Ed Wynn, one of the theater's and radio's foremost comedians, and grandson of that eminent American actor, Frank Keenan. Ed Wynn, in case you hadn't heard, married Frank Keenan's daughter.

Keenan Wynn has an overwhelming and wholly understandable desire to make good on his own and not merely bask in the reflected glory—to swipe Miss Bankhead's title—of his father's illustrious reputation. To this end, he is going in, more or less, for the more serious things of the theater, preferring to emulate the Keenan portion of his nomenclature rather than the Wynn.

With this thought in mind he has played a wide variety of juvenile parts with the summer theatrical colony at Skowhegan, Me., during the past two years and a half. It came out at the Variety Club a night or two ago, when the radio was booming a hot tune into a hot room, that Mr. Wynn, in addition to being a young actor of fine promise, also is a tap dancer of very present accomplishment.

It was fun putting these youngsters on the air. I wonder if anybody by any chance heard them?

A welcome visitor to the tesselated elegance of the drayma department yistiddy was Eddie Sobol, in Washington as avant courier for Max Gordon's production of Helen Jerome's dramatization of Jane Austen's novel of "Pride and Prejudice," which returns to the National Theater, where it had its premiere, for a return engagement beginning on Monday, February 22, Washington's Birthday. Mr. Sobol brings word that on this visit "Pride and Prejudice" will be presented at what amounts to "popular prices" in the present day theater—a $2 top. At any such price as that, even with many inevitable changes in cast, this will represent one of the greatest entertainment bargains of the year.

Two of the Warner Brothers' most important pictures for 1937 have just gone into production, according to word received from the studios in Burbank, Calif.

The first is "The Singing Marine," a musical starring Dick Powell. This will be the third in a Powell series that already includes "Flirtation Walk," dealing with West Point and the Army, and "Shipmates Forever," concerning the Academy at Annapolis and the Navy. Opposite the star will be Doris Weston, sensational radio "find," who has been selected to make her debut in this important role. Lee Dixon, recently seen as the tap-dancing insurance salesman in "Gold Diggers," Hugh Herbert and Allen Jenkins also are included in the cast.

The other important production now under way is "Kid Galahad," based on a magazine serial by Frances Wallace. Edward G. Bobinson, Bette Davis, Humphrey Bogart, Wayne Morris and Jane Bryan will appear in the film, under the direction of Michael Curtiz.

Another outstanding script that will go into production in the near future is "The Story of Emile Zola," in which Paul Muni will be the pictured star and in which Josephine Hutchinson again will play opposite him, as she did in "The Story of Louis Pasteur."

When completed these productions will be shown in Washington at the Earle.

Major Bowes, whose whirling wheel of fortune has pointed the road to entertainment glory for thousands of talented amateur Americans in recent years, possibly in emulation of our old friend, Phil Spitalny, has assembled an all-girl revue, which has been booked for the stage of Loew's Capitol Theater for the week of Friday, February 19. The highlight of this organization is said to be a completely distaff swing band. Jean Rose acts as mistress of ceremonies, presiding over the activities of a large group of youthful specialists, whose talents range from vocalism, whistling and impersonation to the piano and marimba as solo instruments.

It seems worth emphasizing that when "Dead End" comes to the National Theater, the curtain will rise promptly at 8 o'clock at the night performances, in order that the play may be over in time to elude the evil consequences of the District of Columbia's drastic child labor laws.

This will place a severe strain upon those who habitually are late even to an 8:30 performance. It will place an even greater one upon those who arrive in their seat locations on time and then are crawled over by the late-comers.

I suggest that the management adopt the Katharine Cornell policy of permitting no one to be seated between scenes. Have I any takers?

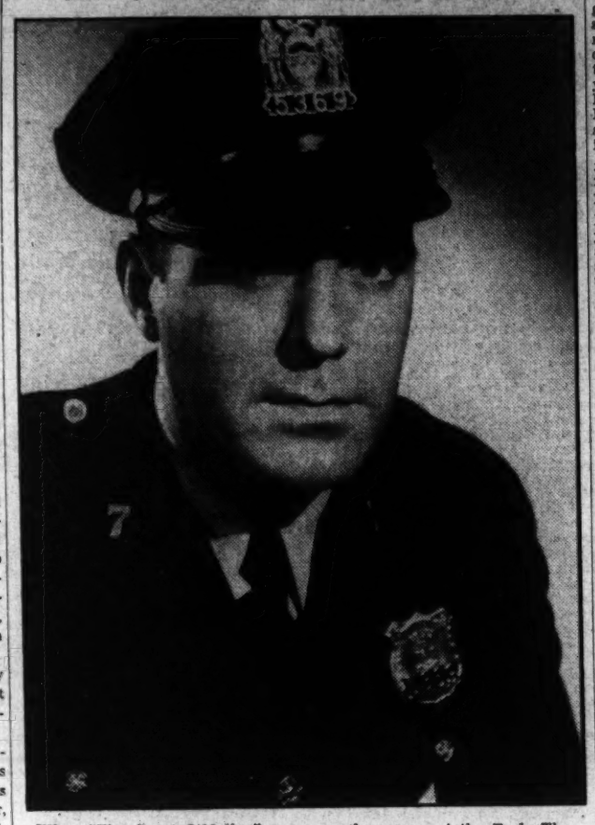
Punishment-Fits-the-Crime Note.

Since these last lines appear here daily—good, bad and indifferent—it was a bit of quick thinking that prompted Art Brown to introduce me over WOL yesterday as "the last line of Bell's." He probably didn't know at the time that he was giving me this one.

Mr. O'Brien Goes on the Force



When "The Great O'Malley" opens on the screen at the Earle Theater on Friday, the stellar role will be played by Pat O'Brien, whose photograph, "in character," appears above. This is not the first time that Mr. O'Brien has appeared as an arm of the law. He has executed the same chore in at least two earlier pictures. In this subject, however, he is accorded unusually strong support by the youthful Miss Sybil Jason, one of the most precocious of the child actresses, and Humphrey Bogart, whose last local appearance was in "The Black Legion."

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDDLER

Hollywood, Feb. 9.—Mutterings: What fun, after the marriage, to introduce him this way: "I want you to meet Mr. Buddy Pickford!"

Growl: Too many press agents who ballyhoo pictures as "colossal" forget to add "flops." Imaginable hilarious evening: Observing Franklyn Pangborn and Mae West rehearse the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet." Who else is weary of phoney romances concocted to bolster new co-starring teams? Masseurs who rube and tell should be rubbed out.

SIMON SIMONE.

Silly notion: To write a speech for Clark Gable, commencing, "Fellow countrymen, lend me your ears!" Then hie like hades for my mountain hole. Frantic urge: To sandpaper the nasal rasp from Jean Harlow's voice. Chuckle: Some day I hope to see a baby picture of Irvin S. Cobb. Diabolical thought: To substitute real coca cola for the "coco cola" a certain hard drinking star imbibes in scenes. It may be treason, but I am hungry for some good, oldtime vaudeville fare.

Swell way to get intoxicated: Peer into Simone Simon's eyes from 1 foot away. Ambition: To stick a pin in Marlene Dietrich and see what would happen to that aloof calm. Extravagant stars should pay more heed to the example of former extravagant stars now working extra. Wondering muse: Why do people shower expensive presents on Shirley Temple when she already has everything?

I arrived on an M.-G.-M. set yesterday while an argument was taking place. It seemed that a certain important movie scene hinged upon the misspelling of a word, and discussion started a general spelling bee. The script girl (acting as teacher) gave out "heterogeneous," and members of the cast and crew began falling like ten pins. Finally there were but two contestants left: Clark Gable and Director John Stahl.

Mons. Stahl tried his level best to live up to his name. "Actors and children first," he suggested. But Gable had other ideas. "Let's flip to see who spells first," he said. Stahl lost, and immediately misspelled the word. Clark then claimed the championship "by process of elimination," and the company stopped for lunch. In the studio cafe, I asked Gable if he could spell the word. "I not only can't pronounce it."

When George Raft was visiting back Ea.., he was approached for an autographed picture by an old acquaintance. A search through the stars luggage brought to light only one frayed photograph, but, bravely enough George wrote: "To he beplaced with a better picture, P. D. Q."

I will not mention the name of the actor, because the "gruff voice" of this story might turn out to be a Black Hand or something. But the other morning, one of your favorite comedians dialed a telephone number, expecting a close friend to answer. Instead, a tough, gruff voice snarled at him in the negative. The actor, thinking he had dialed the number wrongly, tried again, and this time received a shouted imprecation for his trouble.

That evening, the comedian wreaked a terrible revenge. He gathered a group of his friends for an all-night poker party. But the side issue of the party became as important as the poker. That "side issue" was this: Every half hour, from 8 until dawn, members of the poker party took turns dialing the "gruff voice's" number, each time speaking one smart crack and hanging up.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Not a Guess.

"I just never can guess a finesse!" groaned the declarer in the hand shown below.

It was the age-old wail of a player whose self-pity blinded him to his own guilt. The real trouble had been that his entire line of play was wrong. Proper technique would have virtually wiped out the guess, and would have resulted in a fulfilled game contract.

West, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ A 9 5 ♡ 9 5 4 ◇ J 9 5 3 ♣ K J 10
♠ Q 7 3 ♡ A Q 6 ◇ A K 6 4 ♣ 5 3 2	North West East South	♠ 8 2 ♡ J 10 3 2 ◇ Q 10 8 2 ♣ 7 6 4
	♠ K J 10 6 4 ♡ K 8 7 ◇ 7 ♣ A Q 9 8

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1◇	Pass	Pass	Dble.
Pass	1 N T	Pass	2♠
Pass	3♠	Pass	4♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

South should have chosen two spades instead of the double, the jump in this position indicating that he was not reopening merely on suspicion.

West opened the diamond King and, when East signalled with the eight, continued with the Ace. Declarer ruffed the second lead and, as mentioned above, guessed the spade Queen wrong—that is, he went over to dummy's Ace and finessed on the return, losing to West's Queen. West, seeing no reason to pump the declarer, returned a spade, and eventually declarer lost three heart tricks for a penalty of 200 points.

Shrewd card placing from the bidding would have made this contract very easy. South should have known that it was almost certain that West held the heart Ace over his King. Having already lost a diamond, three heart losers in themselves would defeat him, regardless of the location of the spade Queen. Thus, his one chance was to get rid of a heart in some fashion, and the only method offering hope was to play for a so-called "dummy-reversal." This means to convert the shorter trump suit into the master trump holding.

After ruffing the second diamond, South should have led to dummy's nine of spades. This would be a forced finesse, part and parcel of the dummy-reversal plan. If the nine held, a third round of diamonds should be ruffed, the club ten used as entry, and the fourth diamond ruffed. The spade King should then be laid down, and dummy's club Jack used as entry for the cashing of the spade Ace, which would draw the last adverse trump. On this South would discard a heart, then would overtake the club King in order to cash his fourth club. Finally, he would concede two heart tricks.

12 P. M. Marlene Dietrich does a truckin' routine in the foyer at "21." Dave Rubinoff ringsides at the Rainbow Grill to welcome Emery Deutsch. "I am veree hoppy," the violinist assures, "and—not for publication—a beet stewed." . . . "Who's your favorite movie actress?" a barstandee at the Cotton Club asks a stranger. "Sylvia Sidney," the latter replies. "Mine, too!" shouts the first. "Let's drink on that." . . . "What's your favorite ball club?" the second one parries. "The Cards," replies the first. "Mine, too!" shouts the other. "Let's drink on that." . . . They introduced themselves—Dr. Sidney, Sylvia's father, and Sam Breadon—owner of the Cards!

At Le Mirage Earl Smith tells Al Reiser of the Spanish rebel who reported a spy in his ranks. "How do you know he's not one of our own men?" Gen. Franco demanded. "Because," the officer answered, he was born and raised right here in Spain." . . . The news photographer at the Stock Club poses Princess Rospigliosi and Brad Dresser, and their laughter echoes across the room where, alone at a table, sits the lamenting Prince Rospigliosi.

The managers arrive—Prince Serge Obolensky and Count Adlerberg. . . . "This famous comic," Jed Harris is told at Bertoletti's, "got soused and walked out of his hotel room wearing just underwear. When he heard the screams of bystanders he dashed back into his room and then reappeared, still in his underwear, but wearing a hat." . . . "You should've seen Bob Taylor when we all arrived in Washington," Mitzi Green relates at the Versailles. "The women fans mobbed him and tore off his buttons as souvenirs." . . . "That reminds me," Horace Heidt interrupts. "The Capitol marquee says 'Garbo Loves Robert Taylor in 'Camille.'". At the City Hall Theater the marquee reads, 'Irene Dunne Hates Robert Taylor in 'Magnificent Obsession.'"

3 A. M.: "In my play, 'Glory for All,'" Georgie Jessel states at the Hollywood, "there's a slot machine on the stage. The cast, sitting around at rehearsals, have been dropping quarters in it. "A friend of mine," Estelle Taylor reports at Leon & Eddie's, "was stuck with a long lease in one of those no-dogs-or-babies apartment houses.. Elaine was hurt at the Saturday matinee and wanted to show the cast that she was a real trouper, and not only the producer's daughter. She finished her performance and then was rushed to the hospital. . . On West Fifty-second street, Harold Ross, editor of the New Yorker Magazine, is stopped by a reader. "How did that word on Page 6 ever pass the censors?" the latter asks, and Ross shrugs his shouders. . . . Phil Baker exits from the French Casino, escorting Florence Hurlbut, whose fiancee conducted the sit-down love strike. "Here's the lowdown," a press agent reveals. "Her boy friend is the press agent for the Excelsior Springs Chamber of Commerce and planned this stunt to put that city's name on the front pages."

Corby Estate Left Entirely to Widow

In a will dated almost 16 years ago, Karl W. Corby, a partner in the W. B. Hibbs & Co., brokerage firm, directed that his widow, Mrs. Mary G. Corby, should receive his entire estate, it was shown when his will was filed in District Court yesterday. Because there was no petition for probate accompanying the testament, there was no valuation of his estate given.

Mr. Corby, who died February 4, wrote his will on the printed form provided by the Scottish Rite, of which he had long been a member. C. E. Christopher, secretary of the Masonic organiaztion, filed it in court.

Mrs. Corby and C. I. Corby, father of the deceased, were named as executors. It is expected that a petition showing the value of the Corby estate will be filed as soon as an inventory of his vast holdings can be concluded.

Turned-up Curls Show Beauty in Pug Noses

Seattle, Wash., Feb. 9 (AP).—There's beauty in a pug nose, Hairdresser Burton Skiles declared tonight—but it takes the proper hair style to bring it out.

"It's all very simple," Skiles told the National Beauty Congress. To beautify a pug-nosed girl, "just turn the ends of her curls downward. If it's a hooked nose, turn the curls up."

N.J. House Moves to Pay $25,000 Bruno Reward

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 9 (AP).—Appropriation of $25,000 to pay the reward which New Jersey offered for apprehension of the Lindbergh kidnaper is sought in a bill introduced in the House of Assembly to establish "the good faith of the Legislature."

The Assembly and Senate authorized the Governor to offer a reward in 1932. Bruno Richard Hauptmann was executed as the kidnap-killer a year ago, but the Legislature never allotted any money for the reward it promised.

SPORTS — The Washington Post — SPORTS

* X — WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1937 — 19

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Joseph Edward Cronin, who is only the manager of the Red Sox, apparently has not been consulted in the planning of the Red Sox infield for 1937, it would seem from statements given to the press yesterday by Edward Trowbridge Collins, general manager of the team.

POVICH.

Collins was commenting on the Red Sox's prospects for next season and hailed with much elation the trade that brought Pinkey Higgins to Boston from the Athletics in exchange for Bill Werber.

"Higgins will be a great help," said Collins. "We don't have any worries about that third base spot now. We're thinking of second base at the moment. If Bobby Doerr, the kid from San Diego, comes through we should be in pretty good shape."

All of which could be set down as purely seasonal stuff except for the fact that when last interviewed, Mr. Cronin himself had very different and very emphatic ideas about how the Boston infield would line up.

When Collins spoke of Higgins as the club's regular third baseman next season, he had either forgotten or was paying no mind to Cronin's own widely published ideas in the matter. It seems that Cronin has already selected the team's 1937 third baseman and that individual is not Higgins but Mr. Cronin himself.

And when Collins intimates that the Red Sox are depending on Rookie Doerr to care for the second base duties he is again at violent odds with Cronin's ideas on the subject. Because Cronin is definitely committed to Higgins as the Red Sox's second baseman.

Thus there is added evidence that all is not milk and honey between the manager of the Red Sox and the general manager of the team. It was Collins' interference with Bucky Harris' conduct of the Boston team back in 1934 that led to a showdown in which Harris was dismissed. Harris resented the front-office intrusion and second-guessing but was powerless against it. Cronin is operating behind the protection of an iron-clad contract that has three more years to run and can successfully defy Mr. Collins.

Jack Espey, the ensemble kid, whose sartorial splendor is exceeded only by his flair for showmanship, has left his post as official tub-thumper for George Washington University football teams to assume the general managership of the Washington Redskins. He leaves, too, a long and notable list of publicity coups on behalf of the G. W. U. Athletic Association exchequer.

It was Espey who first detected the potential greatness in the figure of Tuffy Leemans and by his incessant ballyhooing projected that young man into the Nation's headlines. It was Espey who devised the between-the-halves pageants at G. W. U.'s home games, who suggested the pattern for those gaudy red, white and blue uniforms which set the Colonials apart. Of George Washington's football games, he made a show.

And when lean gate receipts threatened to make a game with Tulsa University an unprofitable affair for G. W. U., Espey contrived to have sent to Tuffy Leemans a bribe letter, promising that young man $100 if he would feign injury and stay out of the game. It was a terrific tonic to the advance sale, even as Espey probably reckoned it would be.

He didn't miss a bet. When King Alexandria of Serbia was assassinated in France a few years ago and a great manhunt ensued for the assassin who was identified as a Croat, Espey made capital of that, too. The next day he turned up a substitute halfback on the G. W. U. squad who, strangely, was a native-born Croatian, which made news.

But Espey's greatest triumph occurred on that evening at Soldiers' Field, Chicago, late last summer when he sat in the press box and watched 85,000 fans marvel at a comparative unknown who that night stood revealed as the best player on the field. It was the battle between the College All-Stars and the Detroit Lions, and the comparative unknown was Tuffy Leemans, the lad whom Espey for three years had been acclaiming as a genuine star. Tuffy Leemans that night was carrying the ball for Jack Espey.

In Short—

Leemans' professional football career will be shortened by several years if he continues to play as he did last season, professional coaches opine . . . Leemans in his anxiety to pick up that extra yard after being tackled is subjecting himself to unnecessary physical beatings, they declare . . . the smart pros know when they are down . . . Jimmy Erwin, manager of Featherweight Champion Petey Sarron, reports from Johannesburg, South Africa, that Sarron's fight with Laurie Stevens, British lightweight champion, drew a $40,000 gate . . . and that Sarron will collect a $15,000 guarantee in London April 19 for risking his title against Johnny McCrory, British featherweight champ . . . Erwin, who operated a bull ring in Mexico before gathering a stable of fighters, was on the losing side of a revolution and is now "unwelcome" in Mexico . . . which is the same plight of a veteran Philadelphia baseball writer who will not accompany the Athletics to to Mexico City for spring training . . . because as a soldier of fortune in 1926 he took up arms against the reigning faction.

Chicago Bout Encounters New Snag

Soldiers Field Head Frowns on Braddock-Louis Battle.

Cites High Admission Prices; Would Boost Rental Fee.

Chicago, Feb. 9 (AP).—Chicago's prospective "million dollar gate" for a world heavyweight championship fight between Joe Louis and James Braddock, tentatively set for Soldier Field next June 15, struck an unexpected snag today.

Robert J. Dunham, president of the Chicago park district which controls the huge Soldier Field stadium, raised a question as to whether the field should be leased for the fight when the price of tickets will be beyond the reach of the "average citizen," with promoters pocketing the profits.

Would Boost Stadium "Take."

President Dunham suggested that instead of the usual rental fee of 10 per cent of the gross receipts, the promoters be charged 25 per cent of the gate. He suggested further, that if ticket prices are reduced from the announced scale of $3 to $25, the park board's "take" might be decreased proportionately.

"Application for use of Soldier Field for the Braddock-Lewis fight," President Dunham said, "necessitates a decision as to policy; when tickets for admission to the proposed attraction are beyond the means of our average citizen, the question arises should facilities erected by public tax funds be leased to users among whose motives are that of profit, and if so, to what share in such profits is the taxpayer entitled for the use of his property."

Joe Gould, manager of Braddock, balked at signing articles for the bout, unless Soldier Field was the site. The promoters, however, have Comiskey Field, home of the Chicago White Sox, under consideration and may swing Gould into accepting the ball park.

Indians Beaten By Maryland Five, 41-29

Exhibiting about as much defense as an open window, the basketball representatives of William and Mary and Maryland staged a burlesque court clash in Ritchie Coliseum last night where the Terps outroughed the visitors by a 41-29 count.

The game itself was a ragged exhibition of basketball technique. Many times the ball sailed into the audience where it didn't count either for the Indians or the Terrapins. Undismayed by this method of playing, the Terps settled themselves to accumulate sufficient points to clinch the game.

The Old Liners collected themselves long enough to move out in front by 22-13 before William and Mary could count again.

Waverly Wheeler and Capt. Charlie Keller conducted this scoring spurt and Bill Guckeyson continued it to 25-15 at the half time. This advantage the Shipleymen maintained till closing time. George Bunch continued his accurate shooting and succeeded in keeping the Southerners within striking distance.

Wheeler found the hoop for 12 markers to pace the Liners while George Bunch flipped in 14 counters. The Indianmen held a pow wow midway of the second half, seized tomahawks and set out after the pace-setting Terrapin. The latter retired to its shell, however, and took the ball, content to coast to victory.

Another scholastic five fell before Maryland's freshman hardwood artists in the afternoon. The Little Terps swarmed all over the Bethesda-Chevy Chase representatives and emerged with a 42-12 decision.

Melee on Floor Marks Eastern-Western School Series Battle

The fury of the competition between Eastern and Western teams yesterday is indicated by the above scene. In the foreground, Heil (No. 17), of Western, is tangling with Quantrille, of Eastern, while on the far side of the court, Lomax, of Western, and Lombardi, of Eastern, are locked in another struggle. Watching the scramble are Speith, left, of Eastern; De Witt (No. 19), of Western; Burns, of Western, and Referee Joe Mitchell.

Present-Day Tennis Inferior To Past, Says Famed Umpire

New York, Feb. 9 (AP).—The job of a tennis umpire, like that of a judge, is to settle a dispute, not to start one.

So Rufus Davis merely stated a personal opinion today when he said that except for Gottfried Von Cramm, of Germany, and H. W. (Bunny) Austin, of England, amateur tennis is considerably below the standard of former years all around the world.

For more than a half century, starting in South Africa, where he saw service in the second Matabele rebellion and the Boer war, Davis has been officiating from the high chair. His opinions about tennis carry the note of authority.

There's no disputing the quality of his exceptions. Von Cramm has gone to the Wimbledon singles finals the last two years, losing both times to Fred Perry. Austin, almost strictly a "peak player," has a remarkable Dovis up competitive record.

But what about red headed Don Budge? Any number of American fans have all but congratulated him in advance on restoring the Davis Cup to Uncle Sam and winning the United States singles title. Doesn't he rate up there with Austin and Von Cramm?

"I'm afraid I must disagree with popular opinion," said the 70-year-old arbiter. "Budge has not quite earned his spurs. It was creditable for him to extend Perry to five sets last September in the championship round, but his tennis was not exactly top-flight.

"Make no mistake about Budge, however. He's the best prospect since Ellsworth Vines. I have every confidence that he'll fulfill expectations."

Davis was born in Peru of English parents and spent his boyhood in England. He attended Gottingen University in Germany and then drifted to South Africa, where, when he wasn't mounted on a charger in both wars, he sold ostrich feathers and continued to play and umpire tennis.

Feather Business Slumps.

Ostrich feathers were in great demand right up to the World War. He came to the United States at the turn of the century and his business flourished. But with America's entry in the World War, simplicity became the order of the day, and no matter how you look at 'em, ostrich feathers aren't simple. So he became an insurance salesman.

"My brother, Angel, and I played the first set of tennis ever played in Germany," said Davis. "All the students and half the townsfolk came out and when we started to play they thought we were crazy

Tech Is Victim Of Roosevelt Five, 23-19

Fridrick Leads Way; Team Avenges Series Loss; 8-All at Half.

By Bob Garrison.

A determined Roosevelt High School basket ball team turned the tables on the Tech High five, yesterday afternoon, in the Roosevelt gym with a 23-19 victory before 500 spectators. The win nullified an earlier loss sustained by the Rough Riders at the hands of Tech and put them in third place in the interhigh series standings, behind Western and Eastern.

It was a difficult job, that of stopping Tech, and the game was deep in the final quarter before the winner was evident. Tech fought the Riders on even terms throughout the first half and went into a short-lived lead as the third period opened.

"Handsome Ray" Fridrick, Roosevelt forward, had put on a one man scoring show in the first half by registering six points and was instrumental in checking the Tech scoring machine with magnetized

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS.

Western, 35; Eastern, 33 (extra period).
Roosevelt, 23; Tech, 18.

By John R. Vosburgh.

In another of those incredible Eastern-Western basketball games, the Red Raiders from Western snatched impending defeat off the fire yesterday and turned it into a 35-33 extra-period victory which left the crowd at Tech High gasping for oxygen.

The game was a twin of the Eastern-Western game of January 12 which had more thrills to it than a roller-coaster ride. On that occasion, Eastern won, 25-24, in the last second of play after trailing 24-21 with 20 seconds to go. Western matched that performance yesterday.

Seven points behind with a minute and a half to play, the gentlemen from Georgetown pulled the unbelievable stunt of tying the interhigh champions at 31-31 and then went on to win in the extra three minutes of play. Eastern now finds itself tied with Western for first place in the interhigh series and can blame either Capt. Gerald Burns or plucky Paul Heil of Western in particular.

It was two scintillating long-distance shots by Burns which gave Western its winning points in the extra period. But it was Heil who tied the score with 6 seconds to play of the regular time remaining. Six ticks of the watch stood between Western and a 31-28 defeat when the black-haired Heil grabbed the ball from scrappy Russ Lombardy of Eastern, wheeled and in sheer desperation let fly from directly in front of the Eastern bench 30 feet from the basket.

Fouled While Shooting.

As Heil shot, Lombardy in equal desperation flung his arm against the Western boy's wrist to commit his fourth foul of the game. The ball was not deflected, however, and plunked through the net. Time out was taken and Coach Mike Kelley of Eastern sent in redheaded "Soup" Hancock for Lombardy, as Heil prepared to toss his free shot with the game hanging in the balance.

The Western boy rubbed his

Santa Anita Stake Won by Seabiscuit

Calif., Feb 9 (U.P.).—Seabiscuit, Mrs. C. S. Howard's sensational bay colt, which is a 10-1 choice for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, outclassed four other threats for the February 27 classic today with a 4½-length victory in the seven furlong San Carlos. Sir Emerson, an outsider, was second, and Time Supply, third.

Rosemont, show horse in handicap last year and heavy favorite today, finished fifth in the six horse field.

Baer Bid $25,000 For Lewis Match

Philadelphia, Feb. 9 (U.P.).—Max Baer, former heavyweight boxing champion, was offered a $25,000 guarantee today by Promoter Herman Taylor if he would meet John Henry Lewis, of Arizona, in a 15-round bout here next June.

Lewis, holder of the light-heavyweight crown, won a 15-round decision from Al Ettore, Philadelphia heavyweight, in a non-title bout here last night.

Espey Leaves Post at G. W. U. To Sign as Marshall's Aide

John Kingsbury (Jack) Espey, publicity director of George Washington University athletics for the past six years, yesterday accepted the general managership of the Washington Redskins of the National Professional Football League.

Espey will retire from his post at George Washington University on March 15 to begin his duties with the Redskins. He accepted a two-year contract with the Redskins following a conference with Owner George Marshall.

Credited generally as the man who brought to George Washington's football teams wide national notice by his publicity campaigns, Espey, 33 years old, was educated in Washington schools and served as a sports writer on several Washington papers.

A member of the staff of the Central High School Bulletin, Espey later was employed by the Washington Herald, the News, and The Post as a college sports reporter. He left the staff of The Post in 1927 to accept a position as publicity director for Marshall's Palace team in the American Professional Basketball League.

Espey will accompany Marshall to the National Professional Football League meeting at Chicago this week when the teams' 1937 schedule will be arranged.

IGNITION OFF TO START QUICKER

If your engine turns over two or three times without a spark, the cylinders get a better chance to fill up with gas. Just leave the ignition OFF, unless startix-type. Keep clutch pedal down. Open hand throttle about one-third. Pull choke full out, if not automatic. Then operate your starter. Wait for two or three engine revolutions, before switching on ignition. After that it's up to your gasoline. Never mind if your car is a hard-starting model, or isn't just exactly in A-1 condition, or the temperature drops twenty degrees while you're parked. Snark Sets New World Record for 6 1-2 Furlongs at Hialeah

Boojum Colt Is Always In Front

Betters Gallant Knight's Mark in Outrunning Count Morse.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 9 (AP).—Snark, four-year-old son of the one-time speed marvel, Boojum, today created a new world's record for six and a half furlongs in winning the featured Kendall Purse for the Wheatley stable of Mrs. H. C. Phipps and her brother, Ogden Mills. The dark bay colt blazed the distance in 1:15 4-5 under 109 pounds, which included Hilton Dabson.

The former record of 1:16 1-5 over a circular course, was held by Gallant Knight. The latter, as a four year old and under 114 pounds, made that mark at Churchill Downs in 1931 the same day that Twenty Grand won the Kentucky Derby. J. H. Louchheim's Pompom holds the straight course record of 1:16 2-5, which he established in winning the 1936 Belmont Futurity.

Snark was inactive last year. Trainer Jim Fitzsimmons taking him out of training in the spring because of ankle trouble. The colt recently made his first start since November, 1935, and finished a bang-up second to Patriotic, which "beat the gate."

In today's event, Snark broke in front and stayed there. He won by a length and a half, ridden out, from Warren Wright's Count Morse. Mrs. Emil Denemark's Higher Cloud was third, five lengths farther away. Snark was a $6.60 for $2, second choice to Count Morse.

Nine horses started, of which Snark, Count Morse, Dusty Dawn, Maeriel and Paradisical are nominees for the $50,000 added Widener Challenge Cup, 1¼-mile winter classic to be decided here March 6.

It was the second time a world's record had been either equaled or bettered at the current meeting. Earlier in the session, the 2-year-old Sally Shall ran 3 furlongs in 0:33 flat to equal the universal mark.

Dabson had Snark going easily, while disposing of Dusty Dawn in the first 3 furlongs. Count Morse then made his move, but he was up against a "lot of horse," for Snark refused to give ground under Dabson's whiplashing and strong handriding. Higher Cloud outlasted Couleedam for third money.

Favorite Takes Opener.

Tea Leaves, a fast-stepping bay filly in the silks of H. W. Jackson, graduated from the maiden ranks when she led home 13 other fillies of the 2-year-division in the opening event on today's porgram.

A close second in her two previous races, the daughter of Pharamond II—Teapot was installed a $5 for $2 choice. She jumped into command and continued smoothly to win by a length and a half. Maetake, hustled after the leader by Eddie Litzenberger, easily took down the place by three lengths from the "field" horse, Lenpola. The time for the 3 furlongs was 0:34 1-5.

Strategist II and Bichloride ran a dead heat in the mile-and-a-quarter finale, with Steelhead third, a half-length behind. In the split pool, Strategist II paid $3.30, $3.60 and $3.50 across the board, while Bichloride's backers received $4.50, $4.20 and $3.90.

College Boxing Teams Speed Up Work

Cards Battle Western Md. Tomorrow

Columbus to Meet King Friday; Walton Out at Maryland U.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

The slambanging of the daily training grind in three local collegiate rings hit a swifter tempo yesterday as the squads bore down in an effort to be at their peak for the week's fisticuffing.

Eddie La Fond's Cardinals go to the post tomorrow night—two days earlier than usual, against the formidable Terrors of Western Maryland. Friday Columbus' representatives encounter King College in what may well be their toughest assignment of the season, while Saturday brings Rutgers, an old hand at the business, to Maryland. This is anything but the set-up the name Rutgers might suggest.

Western Maryland has improved vastly since losing to Maryland in the season's inaugural last month and the Cardinals will have no easy Charley Havens, Terror tutor, has time with the up-State biffers. Charley Havens, Terror tutor, has patched up his team, revised the line-up and improved its caliber in other ways, as C. U. will discover. Nor has the added experience gained since the Maryland match mitigated against the team.

Outstanding Bout.

Probably the outstanding bout of the evening will be that between Clint Walker, of Western Maryland, and Sully Greco, middleweights. Walker defeated Bob Walton, of Maryland and Edwards of Navy, and knocked out Rugo, of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is considered one of the squad's best punchers and one of its cleverest ringmen.

Greco, according to La Fond, is too finely drawn—overtrained and consequently has had to lay off this week. He'll work out today for the first and only time before the scrap.

King is sending a veteran aggregation to Washington for the Columbus match, including Capt. Bill Wilkinson, lightweight; Lou Summers, featherweight; "Stoopy" Wilkinson, welterweight, and Emiel Gavlak, heavyweight.

Last winter Bill Wilkinson fought a bitter draw with Leon Shub, and threatened to punch Referee "Muggsy" Morris' nose for rendering what he called a "lousy" decision. It was one of the best fights of the season and with Mike Morton trooping around in Shub's brogans this year another great battle appears in the making.

"Stoopy" Wilkinson has drawn Bobby Rawson, Columbus' undefeated welter, as an opponent, a sure sign of another enjoyable bout. Gavlak probably will win without lifting a glove, inasmuch as he scored a one-round knockout over Morris Wolfe last year, and Morris so failed to improve that Coach Jim McNamara is keeping him inactive.

Maryland will be without the services of Bob Walton, crack middleweight, who collapsed in the gym Monday and was removed to the infirmary with a bad case of influenza. Walton, Coach Heine Miller reported, fought a great fight at Charlottesville last week, knocking out Morty Caplin in the third round.

"I could've told him to stand on one ear and he would have done it," Miller beamed. "He got punched around quite a bit in the first two rounds, and if the fight had gone the limit Caplin would have won. But I told Bob to wait for an opening for that right, figuring Caplin would get careless after having things his own way. Caplin got careless and when he did Bob was waiting with that right. Boy, it was a peach."

Lancelot Jacques, who started out as a light-heavyweight, will occupy Walton's place in the line-up against Rutgers.

Guckeyson, Old Line Star, Lacks Appointment to Army

BILL GUCKEYSON.

Bill Guckeyson's hopes of entering West Point this summer hung by a slender thread of hope last night after the University's all-around sports star apparently had exhausted every means of gaining an appointment at his disposal.

All Congressional appointments in his district, the sixth Congressional District of Maryland, have been awarded and alternates selected. The Bethesda lad's last faint hope is that one of the appointees will fail to quality for entrance in the examinations to be given March 2. If this should come to pass and he is fortunate enough to be selected for the vacancy he automatically will qualify on the strength of his college degree which he will receive in June.

But the Terps' star halfback has little hope of this.

"The boys appointed are only in high school," he said yesterday. "But with a chance of going to West Point I know they're cramming every minute to pass the examinations. No, I can't see how I can make it that way."

Unless by some stroke of unforseen good fortune Guckeyson is appointed this year the doors of the Academy will be closed to him forever, and his greatest ambition will never be realized, for after this year he will be above the age limit.

"I guess I started too late," he reflected a bit sadly, "I should have started two years ago. If I should get an appointment now it will be pure luck, nothing else."

In the event that his luck fails Bill will return to Maryland next year and pursue his studies toward a master's degree. He's still determined not to play pro football, although he wouldn't mind coaching.

Beeques Led By Mildred Miskelly

Rolls 137 Game, 357 Set; Watson and Nash Get Games of 163.

Mildred Miskelly, diminutive ace of the Beequees team of the Washington Ladies League, displayed her usual top form in leading the list of individual feats last night at the Arcadia, spilling the maples for a 137 game and 357 set, aiding her team's odd-game decision over the Columbians. The Beequees also annexed high team laurels, adding a 573 game to a total pinfall of 1,543.

The Shamrocks and Nomads waded through their matches with clean slates, the former blanking the Cardinals and the latter turning back the Vee Bees.

The leading El Gee five's match with the Colonials was postponed.

Ray Watson (Hessick Coal) and Ed Nash (Premier Cab Association) shared high game laurels in the Columbia Heights League, each toppling the pins for a 163 score. Watson finished his set with a 393 total. A 651 game and 1,875 set by the Coalmen topped the team scoring.

Georgetown carried off the honors in the Lutheran Church Ladies League, rolling a 506 game and 1,448 set. Rhoda Henning showed the way with 123 and 329 . . . Luther Place chalked up a new season record game mark in the Lutheran Church Men's League, collecting a total of 625. D. George featured the record with a big game of 149. St. Paul No. 1 annexed the pinfall honors, shooting 1,668 with the aid of Heim's 361 set.

G. U. Prep Trounces St. Alban's Five, 36-15

Coach Ed Hargaden gave his entire Georgetown Prep basketball squad a thorough workout yesterday, using his second team to help swamp St. Alban's, 36-15, on the Georgetown Prep floor. Bill Byrd, Prep forward, scored 17 points, all in the first half.

The annual District A. A. U. basketball championships for men and women—biggest event of its kind in Washington—will open March 1, Winfree Johnson, chairman of the A. A. U. basketball committee announced last night.

The gymnasium where some 100 or more teams will battle it out for the supremacy of the city will be selected at a meeting of Johnson's committee today at 5 p. m. at the Central Y. M. C. A. Chairman Johnson also announced a change in control of the women's division of the tourney.

Helen B. Lawrence and Jenny Turnbull, All-America hockey player, will be in charge of the feminine phase of the event. Both are members of the George Washington University faculty.

Members of the committee to meet tonight in addition to Miss Lawrence and Miss Turnbull include Joseph E. Aronoff, Bernie Phillips, Morris Fox, Jon Jankowski, Vincent S. Sullivan, Charlie Reynolds, Harry English, A. Earle Weeks and Joe Bartolini.

Harding Is Picked As Miami U. Coach

Miami, Fla., Feb. 9 (U.P.).—Jack Harding, football coach at St. Thomas College, of Scranton, Pa., for 11 years, tonight was named head coach at the University of Miami, succeeding Irl Tubbs.

The appointment was announced by Dr. B. F. Ashe, president of the university.

Swim Meet Saturday Stars Fick vs. Jordan

Washington's super-swimming meet, featuring Peter Fick, the National freestyle 100-yard champion, will be held in the Shoreham pool, Saturday night, the District A. A. U. announced last night.

The meet was postponed from two weeks ago.

Stating he has "a bone to pick with Washington," Fick is anxious to meet Bob Jordan, the Washington boy now attending Massanutten Military Academy, who handed Fick his first defeat of his prep school career a few weeks ago.

The Olympic star is a student at Staunton Military Academy.

A flock of other stars are entered including June Booth, beautiful Shoreham miss, who will pit her backstroke talent against Dot Forbes, of Philadelphia, alternate on the Olympic team. Other Baltimore, Philadelphia, Washington and Virginia stars will compete.

Stewart Girls Win.

The Stewart Brothers Photographers girls' basketball team defeated the Federal Alcohol femmes, 38 to 20, last night on the Epiphany Church court in a Girls Community Center League game. Dorothy Hand was high scorer, with 16 points.

Eastern Bows To Western In Thriller

35-33 Game Goes Into Overtime; Rivals Now Tied for Lead.

sweaty hands on his pants, and eyeing the basket grimly, flipped the ball through the net without touching the rim. The score was 31-31. The normal game time ended in the next breath.

The Red team had the psychological advantage as the extra period opened but little Lee Lusby of Eastern didn't seem to know it. Scarcely had the period begun in a bedlam of shouting as the fans crowded around the playing surface, when Lusby emerged from a scrimmage and dribbled half the length of the floor to elude Burns and score.

Burns' Shot Ties Score.

A moment later, however, Lusby went out of the game on fouls, but Hugo Schulze missed the free throw Lusby's holding had given him. Then extricating himself from a melee under the Western basket nearly in the corner of the floor, Burns raised the ball over his head and flipped it toward the hoop. The ball hopped around the rim and finally fell through to tie the score with a minute to play.

The teams were fighting in rough and ready style up and down the floor when suddenly Burns coolly emerged with the leather, dribbled a few feet past the middle of the gymnasium and let go a soaring long distance pot shot. The ball swished through without touching the rim.

Carroll Colton, of Eastern, was fouled by DeWitt with nine seconds to go after Eastern had broken up a neat freezing game by Western, but Colton missed the free throw. Western was bidding for another basket as the game ended.

The finish found the title-holders playing with a four-man team. Russ Speith, big football star, was racing down the floor as Western made for the basket, and slipped in front of the Western bench, hitting his head on the Red team's first aid kit. He was stunned and had to be carried to the locker-room when the game ended a few seconds later.

There was some discussion on the part of Coach Kelley afterward that the referees should have called the game when the accident occurred, but he acceded to the officials' final decision.

Playing a less spectacular but vital role was George DeWitt, Western's center, who piled up 13 points to run his total for the season to 55. The teams were tied at 5-5 at the end of the first period and Eastern led, 15-13 at the half. With DeWitt scoring three baskets, Western took a 22-20 lead in the third period but was trailing 31-24 with a minute and a half to play. Hall and DeWitt scored and then with six seconds to go, Mr. Heil pulled his hero act.

Eastern's defeat was its second in its last 30 inter-high games. Coach Kelley, who has been suffering with the flu, went straight home and went to bed.

Interest High In Katan and Dusek Bout

Al Bakhsh May Referee Tomorrow's Feature Clash at Arena.

The capacity of Joe Turner's snug little Arena may be taxed for the first time this year tomorrow night when Ernie Dusek and John Katan renew their hard-boiled wrestling warfare in the finish feature of a rough, tough five-star card.

Principals in a 49-minute thriller here two weeks ago, these fiery rivals are being brought back by special arrangement and popular demand, Ernie revising his schedule in order to fill the engagement.

As the desult of a protest lodged by Katan and paying patrons, Promoter Turner yesterday intimated that Al Bakhsh, popular local official, may referee this match inasmuch as many are of the belief that a break, unwittingly provided by Benny Bortnick, enabled Dusek to win their last time out.

As the result of a protest lodge Almost equally as interesting as natural are four whirlwind supporting numbers restricted to 30 minutes each.

In the featured preliminary Stanley Pinto goes beserk against Laverne Baxter, other matches bringing together Ed Meske vs. Jack Hader, Jack Kennedy vs. Floyd Marshall and Mike Sterling vs. George McLeod.

Roosevelt's Five Wins From Tech

fingers which took shot after shot from beneath the goal as Tech misses caromed from the backboard.

Williamson Shoots.

Johnny Williamson, sub for the injured Dick See, kept the Trainers' hopes afloat in the first quarter as he scored a beautiful pot shot and a foul goal. He went on a tirade in the second period, throwing multiple shots goalward, but his aim was poor and only once did it find the hoop. Wally Merchant scored from the block on a spinner play and Merrill Heddings made good a free toss for Tech to end the first half scoring. It had been nip and tuck and the score read 8-all as the gun barked.

After each team had registered a two-pointer and Roosevelt had matched Stretch Mills' arched shot from the middle of the floor with an equally sensational one by Wicklein, the Stenogs added a pair of goals as Fogel and Wicklein, again, found the target. After Williamson converted a charity flip, the third period ended, 16-13, Roosevelt.

Tech came to 15 as Jim Vermillion scored, but was again checked as Bailey threw "the shot" of the game. He let it go over his shoulder as he raced down the side-line. This made the count 18-15. Frederick made good a pair of gift shots and it was 20 for Roosevelt.

Tech shot its bolt with a basket from the floor by Country Dobyns and foul shots by Vermillion and Merchant, to sum up its total at 19 as Capt. Joe Comer of Roosevelt intercepted a enemy pass, sunk it, to make it 22, and flipped a single-pointer to close the scoring for the day, 23-19.

Cochran, Cue Expert, At Arcadia Tonight

Welker Cochran, world balk-line champion and twice winner of the world's three-cushion billard tournament, is in town to give an instructive exhibition in the fine arts of carom at the Arcadia Billiard Room, Fourteenth and Park road northwest, tonight at 7:30.

In a competitive match, the versatile cue artist will appear in a 35-point match against Ward Nicholas, local star, at three cushions. At the conclusion of the match, Cochrane will offer a 20-minute period of personal instruction free of charge on the fundamentals of the game.

On the Air Today

Gladys Swarthout, supported by Frank Chapman and a concert orchestra conducted by Robert Armbruster, returns to the air tonight (WRC, at 10:30) in the premiere of a new series of programs. Those of the listening audience who saw "Champagne Waltz," which played at the Palace not so long ago, will be interested in knowing that Miss Swarthout selected "Paradise in Waltz Time," from that picture, as the feature of the evening.

A new presentation for the star, however, will be "In the Silence of the Night," by Rachmaninoff. She also will sing "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice." Chapman will feature "Widmung" by Franz, and "The Rangers Song," and with Miss Swarthout, "In the Gloaming."

"The Way You Look Tonight" will be the orchestra's contribution. The signature song for the series will be "Could I Be in Love."

That was a grand idea of the National Broadcasting Co. to provide Meredith Willson and his orchestra in a half hour of dinner music at 6 on Tuesday nights. But you'll have to shop around out of town for it if you hear it. In fact, it appears that the programs by Harry Kogen and orchestra, also scheduled for this period to round out a full week of 6 o'clock dinner music, will not be heard locally. It seems that the hour between 6 and 7 must be kept clear for phonograph records and spot ads.

* * * *

As a matter of record, I protested in my own feeble way. Willson and his medleys of old songs have no greater champion than I. And I was reminded that square in the middle of the 6 to 7 period on the air (WJSV, 6:30, Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays) was the proprietor of this space, presumably in a period upheld by this department as justifying music. Granted that "Man Versus Woman" does require a quarter of this hour, I still feel that the listener should be able to have good music at one of the four local stations, even though a change from one to another might have to be made midway.

Features today:

"Do You Want to Write?" Round table discussion of sources of story material by distinguished literary figures, WMAL, at 3. Preliminary to beginning of a series of talks by Margaret Widdemer.

"Symphonic Strings." Weekly concert, direction of Alfred Wallenstein, WOL, at 10. Included are Handel's Concerto Grosso, No. 5, and "En Bateau," by Debussy.

The boys along Radio Row are kidding Phil Baker this week. Last Sunday night he invited Florence Hurlbut to appear on his program and she did. Florence is the maid who kept Harold Hulen in doubt—and resulted in Harold's chaining himself to Florence's radiator by way of a sit-down strike protest. Well, it seems the cat is out of the bag. The whole plot has been nothing more than a press-agent stunt by Tom Fizdale, who represents Excelsior Springs, the locale of the romance.

Here and there: Fred Waring and his orchestra are contributing two quarter hours to networks in behalf of Boy Scout Week. One is set for C. B. S. Thursday afternoon at 5:15 . . . Fred Astaire's show has been renewed for another 13 weeks, beginning in March . . . A stupendous, gigantic and colossal all-star show has been set for Thursday night in behalf of the Red Cross, to be carried by N. B. C. and Mutual nets. More about it tomorrow . . . Connie Boswell has been fighting a tough battle with influenza, but has a contract extension with David Broekman "California Hour" . . . If Georgie Jessel clicks in his guest appearance Sunday night in "Rippling Rhythm Revue," he'll probably get a permanent job with the show . . . have been dropped.

Chrysler Corp. Jumps Wages Ten Per Cent

Two Increases and a Bonus of $4,000,000 Given Within a Year.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Detroit, Feb. 9.—The Chrysler Corporation announced a 10 per cent wage increase for employes today. A brief statement, issued here, said:

"In response to inquiries it was stated at the office of the Chrysler Corporation today that the corporation had made an increase today which, on the basis of last year's operations, will amount to approximately $13,000,000 to $14,000,000 a year."

Last May 20 the corporation granted a 5 per cent pay increase, estimated then to total $6,000,000. On November 6 President K. T. Keller announced a $4,000,000 bonus, affecting 67,000 employes, of whom 59,000 worked in Detroit and Michigan.

It was said then that it was the third distribution of extra compensation for the year, and that total disbursements of the corporation for the year over and above regular wages of employes, approximated $8,300,000.

W. A. Brady to Fight Baldwin Finance Plan

New York, Feb. 9 (AP).—William A. Brady, theatrical producer, announced today he would continue his fight against the reorganization plan of the Baldwin Locomotive Works by taking an appeal to the higher courts from the decision at Philadelphia last week by Federal Judge Dickinson upholding the plan.

Brady, owner of a block of Baldwin common shares, contends the big locomotive company does not need reorganization of its capital structure. He said its position had been fortified by recent substantial new orders, improving its earning prospects.

Cold Weather In Corn Belt Lifts Prices

Wheat Futures Also Close at Highest Level for the Day.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 9.—Aggressive demand for corn available to be delivered without delay put backbone into corn prices today and also helped to overcome setbacks of wheat values.

Temporary downturns in Chicago wheat quotations were associated with sharply lower prices at Liverpool, where the market was affected by the unusually large amount of wheat on ocean passage to importing countries, and by general rains received throughout India in the nick of time to prevent crop failure.

On the other hand, a cold wave over the corn belt, together with simultaneous excellent shipping call here for corn ready to be used at once, and with scantiness of arrivals of corn at all promary centers, inspired sustained buying of corn futures.

Both corn and wheat closed at the day's top level, corn unchanged to ¾ higher, compared with yesterday's finish; May, 1.10⅛@1.10¼; July, 1.04⅛@1.04¼; September, 97⅜@97½. The Market

Stocks Close Irregular in Less Active Trading; Low-Priced Issues Favored.

New York, Feb. 9.—Heaviness in high-grade bonds and mixed movements in stocks marked the beginning and close of trading. Stock turnover was lower at around 2,600,000 shares, the last hour being the most active. May wheat closed down ¼ of a cent at 130⅞ cents a bushel. Dollars were a shade easier against sterling and francs.

Stocks were mixed throughout and trading was less active. In general attention shifted further from the leading industrials, leaving the field largely in possession of speculators in low-priced shares. Rubber stocks advanced sharply, in sympathy with foreign markets and the commodity. Godyear issues were a feature, rising 1 to 8 points. Firetsone, Goodrich, U. S. Rubber and others climbed 1 to 2 points.

Steels were quiet until a late afternoon stimulus came from the uncovering of a fast one in Warner Brothers. After that the bulls sensed an advantage and bought everything in sight for a while. Ludlum Steel was buoyant. National reached a new high price. U. S. Steel merely rocked along.

Rails were firm to fractionally lower. Southern Railway pushed on to a new top, but ran into profit taking. Norfolk jumped 5 points on one sale.

Fractional losses ruled among public utility stocks. Telephone dipped a point, as did Pacific Gas and Pacific Lighting. Peoples Gas hardened. Oils were the subject of discrimination. Seaboard advanced. Low priced issues of nearly all sorts enjoyed a good day, but most of the time ran under wraps. Graham Paige took the lead from Reo. International Telephone drew away from American Zinc. Radio merely plugged along.

Motor shares did little. General Motors receded a bit further. Chrysler strengthened a bit on dividend hopes, for the board was scheduled to meet. The market made no great effort to figure out the Wallace grain plan, but it assumed AAA would be revived and that whatever happened plenty of bonus money would flow to the rural districts.

Motor Strike.

The most surprise to be found in the motor strike is the longevity of the affair. It had been supposed that, even if it were impossible to come to an agreement, the process of evacuating sit-down strikers and resuming operations at least would have been undertaken before any vital setback in production was sustained. As many see it, the prolongation of the General Motors strike will have only on possible advantage: It may delay the attack by Lewis on other companies and industries. To bring a stoppage of work in two important corporations simultaneously might be too stiff a dose even for the Administration.

Money markets are preparing for higher rates, but the first tremors are subsiding. The market for Treasury discount bills has turned steadier. The latest issue shows no further rise. With taxes, including social security imposts, coming in on future tax dates at a volume never previously known, and with excess reserves sharply reduced, the Treasury will have to handle its financing operations more carefully than it has had to do for many years. The necessity for nearly balancing money market turnovers in and out may necessitate issues of securities for new money merely to add to the Treasury's cash balance so as to provide debt maturities on dates when they are needed. The Treasury will not have to worry about this in March, because there will be plenty of excess reserves still left in the money market; June may be another story.

Banking Position.

A further drop of $63,000,000 in holdings of Government securities, fairly general throughout the country, was the feature of the statement of member banks in leading cities for the week ended February 3. Nearly half the decrease came in the New York district. Other securities increased $15,000,000, of which $11,000,000 was in the New York district. Reserves were down $25,000,000, but in New York there was a nominal increase. Demand deposits declined $37,000,000, mainly at Chicago. Time deposits rose $25,000,000, New York banks accounting for $16,000,000 of the increase. Balances of domestic banks decreased $35,000,000 in New York, $14,000,000 in San Francisco, $10,000,000 in Boston and $41,000,000 in all reporting member banks. A $23,000,000 decrease in brokers' loans was partly offset by a rise of $10,000,000 in loans against securities to others. Other loans rose $2,000,000.

Steel Report.

United States Steel will report tomorrow noon its shipments for January. The tonnage undoubtedly will be considerably in excess of that sent out in the same month of a year ago. Whether it will exceed the December total depends somewhat on the amount of inventory building that took place, but the operating rate last month was higher on the average than it was in December. In the old days when United States Steel published each month the volume of orders on its books, interest in the statistics was greatly in excess of that now shown for the monthly shipment figures. The order figures may have needed interpretation, but they told more than do the shipments, especially when the average operating rate already is pretty well known.

Minds Changed.

The trouble in Warner began on news published shortly before 1 p. m., that a contemplated common stock offering had been withdrawn. Up to that time the price range on the tape had been 15 to 15⅝. It was finally possible to adjust the books to the new buying orders and secure enough stock on offer to resume trading at a rise of only 2 points.

1937 Research Bill To Be $250,000,000

Industry's 1937 appropriations for research will exceed $250,000,000, it is estimated by Dr. E. R. Weidlein, president of the American Chemical Society. "With corporate earnings rising markedly and with the new tax law favoring legitimate expenditures in increased research, more and more attention is being given to the development of new products and new uses in the industries," declared Dr. Weidlein, who is director of the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, Pittsburgh.

Postwar Peak Set by Demand For Textiles

Cotton and Rayon Make Large Gains; Silk and Wool Decline.

New York, Feb. 9.—Consumption of cotton, wool, silk and rayon in the United States during 1936 was the largest of any year since the World War, according to the Textile Economics Bureau today. Total consumption of these products amounted to 4,233,400,000 pounds against 3,479,000,000 pounds in 1935 and 4,135,600,000 pounds in 1927, the previous post-war peak.

Cotton consumption last year registered the sharpest gain, both from the standpoint of volume and from the standpoint of percentage of the total of all textile fiber consumption. Rayon consumption also gained sharply. The use of wool and silk registered a decline as compared with 1935.

Cotton's percentage of all textile fiber consumption was 81.9 per cent for 1936 against 79.2 per cent for 1935. The steady growth of rayon consumption (yarn plus staple fiber) is registered not only in pounds but also in per cent. In 1936 rayon accounted for 7.6 per cent of the total of the four-fiber consumption against only 0.3 per cent in 1920. Silk's relative position in 1936 at 1.4 per cent was the lowest since 1923. Wool's percentage declined to 9.1 per cent which is little changed from previous years.

571 Closed Banks Now Liquidated

J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, announced yesterday the completion of 20 receiverships during January, 1937, making a total of 571 receiverships finally closed or restored to solvency since the so-called banking holiday of March, 1933. Total disbursements, including offsets allowed, to depositors and other creditors of these 571 institutions, exclusive of the 42 receiverships restored to solvency, aggregated $168,759,511, or an average return of 76.40 per cent of total liabilities, while unsecured creditors received dividends amounting to an average of 62.18 per cent of their claims.

Among the institutions reported liquidated is the Chevy Chase Savings Bank which did not reopen after the banking holiday and was placed in conservatorship. About the Man Who Created

Joe Palooka

Ham Fisher.

JOE PALOOKA and HAM FISHER . . . the man who created him . . . both come from Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania. Although the family didn't encourage the idea, "Ham" has been drawing "pichers" ever since he was 3 years old.

AFTER graduation from high school, "Ham" attended college for two weeks and then continued his higher education driving a truck in an attempt to retrieve the Fisher family fortunes. He next tried his hand as a haberdashery salesman and, after that, a Fuller brush man. Came the war and "Ham" arrived at Camp Dix the day the armistice was signed.

BACK in Wilkes-Barre, now 20 years of age, he got his first newspaper job as a roving reporter-cartoonist on the local Record. Soon after he shifted to the Wilkes-Barre Times-Leader . . . because they offered to put his name in larger type.

THEN came the idea for Joe Palooka. For two years "Ham" tried to sell the strip to a syndicate, without success. He finally borrowed train fare to New York, barged into the office of the largest newspaper in town and got a job soliciting classified advertisements. In his spare time he worked on the PALOOKA strip idea. Then he took it to Charles McAdam, president of the McNaught Syndicate. "Ham" told him it was the greatest strip in existence . . . but Mr. McAdam had to be shown. So the young artist turned syndicate salesman, took his creation to the newspapers, himself, and sold it to 20 of them within a month.

TODAY, JOE PALOOKA is a personage in practically every city in the country.

Bill to Extend U.S. Trade Pact Passed in House

Republican Opposition Proves Futile; Vote 284 to 100; Goes to Senate.

By the Associated Press.

The House voted yesterday to continue the Administration's reciprocal trade agreements act for three years from its June 12 expiration date.

Republicans fought an extension resolution at every step, but the heavy Democratic majority bowled over with machine-like precision every amendment they offered.

A 284-to-100 roll call vote sent the measure to the Senate.

With only a smattering of Democratic support, Republicans hammered at the trade agreements program as injurious to American agriculture and business.

Benefits Are Claimed.

Democrats in general took an exactly opposite stand, contending benefits to this country far exceeded in importance any concessions granted in other nations under the 15 trade pacts already negotiated.

In these pacts, negotiated by Secretary Hull, the United States and foreign nations agree to reduce tariffs or other trade barriers. The pacts do not require the approval of the Senate.

The House tossed aside a proposal by Representative Treadway (Republican), Massachusetts, to forbid lowering any tarrif below a level required to equalize foreign and domestic costs of production.

Amendment Rejected.

The only change suggested by a Democrat, a similar amendment by Representative Wilcox (Democrat), Florida, applying to farm products, met a like fate.

Never for a moment was adoption of the resolutio nin doubt.

Summing up for Democratic proponents, Representative Vinson (Democrat), Kentucky, said the opposition was based on fear, not facts, and that the trade pacts law was "removing the excessive, inordinate tarrif barriers that were throttling our foreign trade."

Chairman Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, said facts had been submitted to the Ways and Means Committee proving that American agriculture had received substantial benefits.

Pacific Unions Charged With 'Sovietizing' Effort

Philadelphia, Feb. 9 (U.P.).—Pacific Coast unionists are attempting to "sovietize the United States through the Maritime Federation," Capt. Edgar S. Perry, representative of the Employers and Manufacturers Association of Los Angeles, told the American Management Association convention today.

Addressing the opening session of the three-day meeting, Perry said organized labor endeavored to obtain control of the food industries on the West Coast through the trucking industry.

Studio Drape Ignites, Adds Thrill to Movie

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 9 (AP).—Fire added an unscheduled thrill today to movie making at the Paramount Studio.

During the shooting of an exterior scene a drape was blow against an arc light and ignited. Barbara Stanwyck, Director Alfred Satell and 50 extras rushed into the false store front to rescue their coats and workmen quickly beat out the flames.

Joliet Wallpaper Mills Crippled by 3 Strikes

Joliet, Ill., Feb. 9 (AP).—Joliet's wallpaper industry, credited with producing about 60 per cent of the Nation's medium and low-priced wallpaper, was crippled today by three strikes.

At least 600 of the 1,500 workers in the city's six wallpaper mills were estimated to be idle.

'Sit' Strike Is Settled In Brooklyn Hospital

New York, Feb. 9 (U.P.).—The sit-down strike of 96 employes of Israel Zion Hospital, Brooklyn, was settled tonight, Boris Fingerhood, superintendent of the hospital, said. The strike started early yesterday.

The management agreed to two of the strikers' three demands—wage increase of $15 a month and assurance none would be discharged as a result of this strike.

London Society Dons Gas Masks at Parties

London, Feb. 9 (AP).—The Government helped out today in London's newest social wrinkle—"gas mask parties."

Authorities, trying to interest everybody in air defense plans, loaned hundreds of gas masks to go with fetching gowns of guests at an "at home" to be given Friday by the Mayoress of Wimbledon, Mrs. G. Farquharson.

Farm Leaders Agree to Grain Storage Plans

Ask 'Approximate Parity' in Commodity Loans; Close Sessions.

By Russell Smith.

National farm leaders concluded a two-day meeting here last night with indorsement of the ever normal granary as the permanent Federal farm program, but demanded it be backed by "approximate parity" values in commodity loans and insured by a crop control device against the granary's overflow.

They then chose a committee of five to remain here to shape the program in conference with Congressional leaders, and adjourned.

Secretary Wallace thus gained virtually solid support for his surplus storage proposal as the fundamental of Administration agricultural policy. At the same time, however, the conference served to emphasize the critical lack of a definite system of production mastery to serve as authoritative guarantee of the granary plan's success.

Proof Burden on U. S.

The conference report likewise placed upon both the Agriculture Department and Congress the burden of proof as to size of the commodity loans which will be offered farmers to encourage participation in the granary program. The farm leaders feel that unless the 1909-14 average price is approximated in making these loans, no "plank will be put under prices," in Wallace's phrase.

It thus appears that legislation embodying the granary will specify approximation of that index for most commodity loan values. Exception of cotton is expected by reason of the still moot issue as to whether a large cotton crop at a moderate price or a small crop at a high price is more desirable.

The committee which will work with Congress in drafting the suggested legislation, consists of Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation; L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange; E. H. Everson, president of the National Farmers Union; M. W. Thatcher, of Chevy Chase, and A. S. Williams, chairman of the general conference committee which drew the report.

Fear Unconstitutionality.

Of this committee, Taber and Everson do not unreservedly indorse the recommendations. Both believe the crop control sections of the report may be constitutionally invalid, while the latter adheres to the Farmers Union's traditional thesis that guaranty to the farmer of production cost should be the base of any farm program.

The conference recommendation which is most likely to cause controversy is that asserting the Government should be empowered to back the granary plan by using either benefit payments or the Federal taxing power to restrict output. The latter power, so far as concerns processing taxes, has been invalidated by the Supreme Court, while the system of benefit payments in force under the soil conservation act has yet to be tested legally.

Solution of the tangle remains the gravest problem facing the permanent committee and Congress in drafting the proposed legislation.

The conference was unanimous in accepting the granary plan, and added to it a recommendation for a Federally owned and operated warehouse system. The granary plan provides for the accumulation of surpluses in years of high production, this surplus to be sealed on the farm and held until it is needed to bolster prices in years of low production.

Other Recommendations.

Other recommendations of the conference included:

Amendment of the soil conservation act to retain Federal administration until 1940 instead of turning it over to the States next year as the present law provides.

Authorization for the Secretary to seek rapid re-establishment of the ratio between farm and urban purchasing power that prevailed in the 1909-14 five-year period.

An expanded program of retiring sub-marginal land through Government purchases and utilization so as to "restore natural resources."

Strengthening of the marketing agreement provisions of the agricultural adjustment act.

Crop insurance.

Aid to farm tenants through a program to "encourage more general holding of farm units by owner-operators."

Administration of the "ever-normal granary" program by "permanently established governmental agencies or corporations rather than by any Federal agencies now existing which are of a temporary and emergency character."

Bohr's Audience Baffled to a Man As Vowels Bound

Toronto, Feb. 9 (Canadian Press).—Dr. Niels Bohr, of Copenhagen, 1923 Nobel Prize winner, talked in domed Convocation Hall on "Light and Life."

Several hundred persons sat for two hours with knit brows.

Today, not a listener could be found who had understood a word. Poor acoustics which sent Dr. Bohr's Danish accent bounding in vocal blurs from wall to floor to ceiling were blamed.

Reporters rushed to the platform after the speech last night, but Dr. Bohr had gone. There was no copy of the text.

Dr. H. J. Cody, president of the University of Toronto, presiding, said, he was as baffled as anybody.

Electrical Group Hears Technician

Selecting as his subject "Adventures in Electricity," Dr. Phillips Thomas, Research Engineer of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., addressed the February meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, Washington Section, last night in the auditorium of the Potomac Electric Power Co.

Dr. Thomas' talk combined the technical and the human interest angles. He told of many of his experiments and experiences in the Westinghouse laboratories.

Dr. Townsend Denies Charge; Ready for Trial

Will Face Court Feb. 23 for Alleged Contempt of House Group.

Seemingly unconcerned, Dr. Francis E. Townsend, head of the Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., yesterday in District Court entered a plea of not guilty to a charge that he had been contemptious of the House of Representatives and said he would be ready to stand trial February 23. It was the first court appearance of the doctor since he was indicted shortly after the November elections.

Reporters found little difficulty in extracting from Dr. Townsend a short statement about his plans. He intimated he would not be averse to conducting his pension plan from the District Jail because from that point of vantage he would be free from the frequent interferences he now has to put up with.

"Well, I may have to transfer my work to a cell in the District Jail. I don't know but that it would be an improvement because I would certainly have fewer interruptions," he said in response to questions.

The doctor is charged with having flaunted a House committee that was investigating his old age pensions plan. When certain questions aroused his ire he stalked from the committee hearing room, refusing to answer further questions and declining to remain until he was formally released. The charge against him is that he refused to give the Bell investigating committee the information it then desired so that a complete picture of the numerous old age plans could be drawn.

Two of his former aides, Dr. Clinton Wunder and J. B. Kiefer, pleaded guilty to a contempt of the House of Representatives charge Monday and were given suspended sentences of a year in jail and fines of $100.

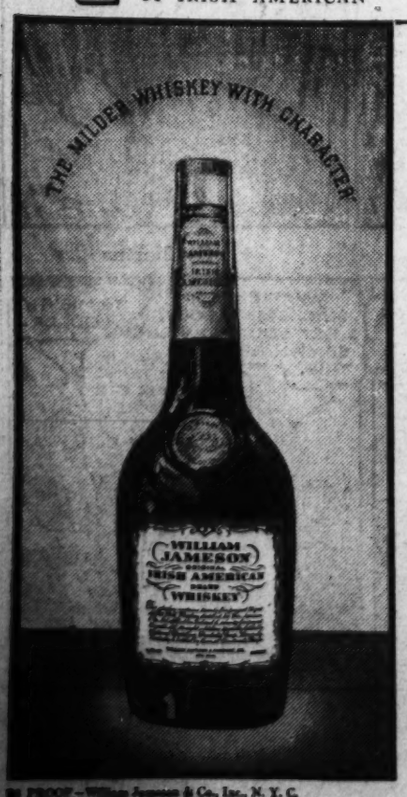
"There were giants in those days"

Modern man, unlike his ancestors, watches his diet, prefers a milder whiskey like IRISH AMERICAN, the only whiskey with all these 3 VIRTUES:

1 The new, good taste of IRISH AMERICAN

2 The greater mildness of IRISH AMERICAN

3 The easier digestibility of IRISH AMERICAN



GOURMANDIZING and guzzling may have been the fashion in the "good old days"—but modern man has too much good sense to commit such crimes against the digestive system. That is why IRISH AMERICAN Whiskey has received so warm a welcome. For if ever a whiskey was especially designed and developed for modern living, IRISH AMERICAN was so designed and developed.

Man, a century ago, ate and drank as he pleased; gave little thought to his diet.

The new good taste of IRISH AMERICAN may remind you of the flavor of imported whiskies or the flavor of expensive American whiskies. But it will above all, please you with its own distinct and different taste, a flavor well worth your admiration and respect.

The mildness of this fine whiskey will convince you that a whiskey can be rounded, complete and finished and still be light.

IRISH AMERICAN's easier digestibility is sure to appeal to your good judgment. In this day and age a completely satisfactory whiskey must be easy on the system as well as the palate.

The special qualities and virtues of IRISH AMERICAN are due to combining, in perfect union, rich, robust pot still whiskey from abroad with specially distilled straight whiskey from Kentucky. The happy result of this union is this unique and different whiskey whose extraordinary qualities and exclusive virtues are quickly noted, however you may use it—straight, with soda, water, in highballs or in mixed drinks.

On sale in most places where good liquors are sold. Moderate in price. Accept no substitutes.

At your Liquor Store $1.44 pint $2.28 4/5 qt. And at your Bar
